Report urges courses in multiculturalism

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Mandatory courses on multiculturalism and cultural sensitivity as part of law schools' curricula are recommended in a report made to provincial court judges.

The report is by members of ethnic and multicultural community organizations and those associated with British Columbia's justice system.

The report, submitted to judges on Sept. 23 by Judge Donna Martinson, chair of the equity committee of the Provincial Court, is under consideration.

The report says there should be more minorities among B.C. lawyers, which "will lead to a greater cultural diversity in the ranks of judges."

The report also calls for "improved identification of judges whose judgments may be influenced by negative biases towards certain groups. They [judges] should be removed from cases where those biases may influence their decisions."

The religious significance of swearing on the Bible is often not understood by all people, says the report, particularly if they practise a religion other than Christianity or Judaism. Individuals should be made aware of the option of swearing an affirmation rather than taking the oath when testifying.

The report notes that hate motivated crimes can carry additional sentences, "but prosecutors have not traditionally presented evidence of hate bias. If it's apparent that a crime was motivated by racism and hate, judges are encouraged to apply the maximum sentences available to them."

The report also recommended having better court interpreters to ensure that all proceedings are clearly understood.

Legislation to be tested

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Legislation under the Human Rights Act of British Columbia that says published material that discriminates against Jewish persons exposes all Jews to hatred and contempt will be tested at a B.C Council of Human Rights hearing to be held shortly.

The legislation was passed more than two years ago and Canadian Jewish Congress, Pacific region, has been pressing for action since May 26, 1994, when it filed a complaint against North Shore News columnist Doug Collins, alleging that one of his columns violated the legislation.

Following a 24-month investigation by the Human Rights Council, Congress has just been informed that the complaint has been designated to be heard by a member of the Council under section 14(1)(d) of the Human Rights Act. The hearing date has not yet been set. It's the first case to be heard under the legislation.

The Congress complaint relates to a column written by Collins entitled Hollywood Propaganda, published in the North Shore News on March 9, 1994. Dr. Michael Elterman, chair of the region, said at the time that "with this column Doug Collins has written an item which will, in our view, expose the Jewish community to hatred and contempt."

Winnipeg shul hires former Toronto cantor

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG – Cantor Hesh Mayersdorf has been named the new chazzan of the Rosh Pina Congregation here.

The city's second largest congregation with 750 members, the Rosh Pina has been functioning without a full-time chazzan since the retirement of Cantor Judah Smolack a little over a year ago.

Mayersdorf is described in a Rosh Pina news release as an outstanding lyric tenor who has performed in concerts worldwide. Before coming to Winnipeg, he most recently served as chazzan at Toronto's Beth Radom Congregation and before that at the Beth David-B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation there. He has also served congregations in his native New York City.

Mayersdorf was first trained by his father, Cantor Morris Mayersdorf of New York. He graduated from Yeshiva Eastern Parkway in Brooklyn and from Brooklyn College and studied music and voice at the Julliard School of Music and with world famous chazzanim such as the late David Kousevitsky and Moshe Stern.

Kosher cookbook offers healthy, appealing recipes

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Food can be healthy, appealing and kosher all at the same time, assert Thelma Barer-Stein, Esther Schwartz and Risa Vandersluis.

They should know. The three women have recently produced a new cookbook, To Life, published by Culture Concepts, which is chockful of recipes that have all of those qualities.

Their credentials are impressive. Barer-Stein is a dietician, writer, educator and publisher; Vandershuis, also a dietician, has been involved in diabetic and pregnancy nutrition counselling and clinics at Baycrest Centre, at Womens' College Hospital, in Israel and privately; and Schwartz, formerly a cooking teacher, is the kosher food consultant with the Orthodox Division, Canadian Jewish Congress, and a founder of the Jewish diabetes chapter of the Canadian Diabetes Association.

Schwartz started the ball rolling some 10 years ago.

"When I became diabetic, I felt there was a need for a kosher diabetic cookbook. I contacted Tridec (Women's College Hospital diabetic clinic) dietician Marjorie Holland, and she got me and Risa together."

They soon joined forces with Barer-Stein, who had already produced a healthy eating cookbook, You Are What You Eat.

"At one point, we put together a proposal [for a kosher diabetic cookbook], but publishers felt the focus was too narrow."

They expanded the scope of the book to "a kosher cookbook for the widest audience, subtle about Judaism, and with nutrient analyses," said Barer-Stein.

In any event, diabetics should eat the same food as anyone else, Vandersluis stressed, "just with controlled portions."

The cookbook offers a variety of foods, with lots of grains and vegetables, some fish, but very little meat, in keeping with today's nutritional standards.

Recipes are arranged not by food type, but by meal. "It answers the question, 'What do we serve with that recipe?' " Barer-Stein explained. "We offer a combination of flavor, color, texture and nutrition — a well-balanced combination of everything."

"We even offer suggestions for simplifying recipes and menus, as we are aware how busy people are today."

The three laughed as they described how they tested the recipes "on a lot of people who didn't even realize they were testing," as Vandersluis said. "We wanted a natural response."

"We wanted the book to be a heritage treasure," Schwartz added; so they included descriptions of the holidays and of different food customs from both Ashkenazi and Sephardi traditions.

"We want to try to unify and bring together what is beautiful in tradition and what we should be sharing."

"What Jews have always done," said Schwartz, "is to take what food is locally available, like spices and vegetables, and adapt it to kashrut."

While they groaned thinking of all the effort they had to put in to get the book to fruition, they share a twinkle in their eyes.

"Vandersluis summed it up. "We had a lot of fun doing it."

Balance lacking in It's a Boy

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Is ritual circumcision really necessary? That's the implicit and pointed question Victor Schonfeld poses in his provocative documentary, It's a Boy!

Scheduled to be broadcast on TVOntario on Oct. 9 at 10 p.m. and again on Oct. 11 at 12:25 a.m., It's a Boy! explores a surgical procedure intrinsic to Jews and Muslims, as well as some Africans.

The 40-minute British film, though acknowledging that circumcision is an inextricable and sacrosanct component of Judaism and Islam, is skeptical about this ancient rite.

Claiming that circumcision is the only medical procedure routinely carried out without anesthetic, It's a Boy builds its case by suggesting that it is needlessly painful and promotes neither cleanliness nor good health.

As might be expected, the film is not entirely balanced. True, Schonfeld presents Jewish and Muslim clerics who favor circumcision. But their comments are offset by interviews with men and women who, for one reason or another, are not well disposed toward circumcision.

Regrettably, Schonfeld makes what can only be described as a limp attempt to achieve a measure of even-handedness. The exponents of circumcision, be they Jews or Muslims, come across as neither compelling nor persuasive, in contrast to the critics who are articulate and seemingly reasonable.

It's a Boy, therefore, is a point of view rather than an impassioned or enlightening examination of circumcision.

Run for cure

TORONTO — Thousands are expected to gather Oct. 27 at the Royal Ontario Museum for the 1996 Honda — Run For The Cure, a major fundraising event for breast cancer research.

The first run was organized in 1992 in Toronto by the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation. Organizers had expected about 300 people to attend the five-kilometre run/one-km walk, but were surprised by a turnout of 1,500. Since then, the run has grown to include 10 cities across Canada and 25,000 participants.

October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month and to increase public understanding of the disease, Mayor Barbara Hall has declared Oct. 16 to be Breast Cancer Awareness Day.

Registration forms for the run are available at Running Room locations throughout the city, the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation at 790 Bay St., suite 1000, various hospitals and gyms, Druxy's Famous Deli locations in Metro Toronto and starting Oct. 1, at all Metro LCBO outlets. Or call the Run for the Cure Hotline 416-599-7779, to receive a brochure by mail.

Celebrating
Simchat Torah

The Torah cycle ends and begins again.

Things to do during the Chag

By DEENA RESNICKOFF

These activities will help you to celebrate Simchat Torah.

PICTURING THE TORAH

The Jewish religion is based on the Torah, which we read in the synagogue. We can also learn about it at home or at school.

Think about some of the wonderful stories from the Torah that you have heard at synagogue. Draw a picture of one of your favorite stories.

Show your picture to a younger child. Try to retell that story to him or her by using your picture. Perhaps they will enjoy it, too.

WAVE YOUR FLAG

At Simchat Torah, many of our family and friends carry and wave flags in synagogue. Why not make your own flag?

You or an adult will need to cut a piece of plain, white fabric into a large rectangle. Create your special flag with different shades of blue fabric paint (easily found at a craft store), by painting symbols that show why Simchat Torah is so special to you and your family.

Let your flag dry overnight and then glue it to a stick. Don't forget to take it with you to synagogue and wave it proudly!

SIMCHAT TORAH WORD SCRAMBLE

Try to unscramble these words that have special meaning at Simchat Torah and all throughout the year.

1. S L A R Y I E
2. H O S H N E C
3. A Y D
4. E R M I T E K
5. E E T H S R B I I

SHOWING RESPECT FOR ONE AND ALL

Just as we must show respect to the people we love, we must show respect to our Torah. One way for us to show it respect is to try and follow its teachings.

Create a booklet that illustrates ways people can show the Torah respect. You could also illustrate some ways people should treat our beloved Torah.

Read and discuss your booklet with your family and friends before you go to synagogue together.

ANSWERS TO THE SIMCHAT TORAH WORD SCRAMBLE:

1. YISRAEL: The very last word of our Torah.
2. CHOSHEN: The Hebrew word for the breastplate on the Torah.
3. YAD: The Hebrew word for the pointer we use to read the Torah.
4. KETERIM: The Hebrew word for the ornamental crowns on the Torah.
5. BERESHIT: The very first word of our Torah.

Golem created out of clay to help Jews of Prague

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

Most of us like to read stories about beings created by people, usually by mad scientists. One of the most famous is Frankenstein by Mary Shelley.

We Jews have our own legends about these creatures, who we call golems. The most famous golem is one supposedly created by Rabbi Judah Loew to help the Jews of Prague. You can read about it in The Golem by Barbara Rogasky, with illustrations by Trina Schart Hyman (Holiday House, 1996).

Several hundred years ago, according to the story, the Jews of Prague, as in many other places, were being badly persecuted. They had to pay special taxes, their neighbors felt they could attack them any time they wanted, and many Christians accused them of using the blood of Christian children to make matzah.

Out of clay, Rabbi Loew created the golem, a huge man-like figure, and used the secret name of G-d to bring it to life. The Golem tells several stories about how the creature saved the Jews from persecution, using its superhuman strength.

Some of the stories are even funny, since the golem, even though it was very big and strong, couldn't think intelligently. For instance, when the rabbi's wife asked it to bring water, it kept bringing water until it caused a flood, because she hadn't told it when to stop.

According to legend, the golem still exists, wrapped in newspapers in the attic of the Altencushul in Prague. Some people even say that some day, if things get really bad for the Jews, it will come back to life to help us.

Old passions unleashed as walls opened

By ABRAHAM RABINOVICH
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – The tunnel that this week delineated the explosive fault line between Jews and Arabs in Jerusalem had no archeological purpose when its excavation was begun some 25 years ago. The fault line it then defined was between Jews alone.

TUNNEL TURMOIL

The tunnel was initiated by the Religious Affairs Ministry after the Six Day War, in order to expose the subterranean courses of the Temple Mount north of the Western Wall, an area it saw as suffused with holiness.

By law, excavations in archeological areas are the exclusive province of professional archeologists licensed by the government. In a deft act of turfmanship, however, the archeological authorities agreed to let the Religious Affairs Ministry have its dig, as long as its functionaries did not attempt to interfere with the major excavation being conducted at the southern foot of the Temple Mount by Prof. Binyamin Mazar.

The ministry had previously attempted to declare the Temple Mount wall being exposed south of the Western Wall as a prayer area and to oust the archeologists. Mazar's assistant, archeologist Meir Ben-Dov, was assigned to oversee the ministry dig on a part-time basis in order to legitimize it, but the effort was more of a mining operation than an archeological dig.

The Muslim authorities were concerned about the ministry tunnel along the Temple Mount wall, and not without cause. Two incidents during the Mazar dig along the southern wall had sounded alarm bells. Technion engineers had already measured a slight movement in part of the southern wall during the excavations.

Ben-Dov says the finding was based on an instrument misreading, but concrete buttresses were nevertheless put in place to support the wall.

The Wakf (Muslim religious authority) was dismayed when Ben-Dov, working on the Mazar dig, probed two ancient tunnels dating from the Second Temple period at the southern foot of the Temple Mount beneath Al-Aksa Mosque in the area of the Hulda and Single gates, and penetrated five metres into one and 30 metres into another.

The Muslim authorities prevailed on the government to call off Ben-Dov and the tunnels were resealed. They have remain so ever since.

Apart from their concerns about possible structural damage on the Mount itself, the Muslim authorities were offended by the notion of non-Muslims digging under, or even on the fringes of, a Muslim holy place; the fact that it was also a Jewish holy place was not a mitigating factor to them.

The Arabs were no less upset at the political implications of large-scale excavations in the Old City that underlined the extent of Israeli control in Jerusalem.

Although the ministry tunnel was a sideshow compared to the prodigious and enormously rewarding Mazar dig, the Wakf's fears were later realized there, both in the physical and political-religious spheres.

The first stage of the ministry operation in the early 1970s, consisted of clearing dirt from huge arched spaces just north of the Western Wall. These arches, according to archeologist Dan Bahat, had been built in the 13th to 15th centuries by the Mamelukes.

North of these arches, the ministry's engineers drove a narrow tunnel alongside the Temple Mount – the one involved in the current controversy – revealing the enormous stones in its lower courses.

Large cracks appeared

There was no penetration of the Mount itself or danger to holy places, but midway through the work on the tunnel, large cracks appeared in one of the residential buildings in the Muslim Quarter, 12 metres above the excavation. The dig was halted until steel buttresses secured the building.

In 1982, one of the most dramatic Jewish-Arab confrontations in post-Six Day War Jerusalem occurred in the tunnel. It involved the late Rabbi Yehuda Meir Getz, the rabbi of the Western Wall, a colorful personality who would pray alone each morning inside the tunnel, at a point opposite what he presumed to have been the Holy of Holies on the Temple Mount.

One day, Arabs on the Mount heard banging from one of its cisterns. When they entered it, they found that Jewish workers under Rabbi Getz's supervision had partially broken through an ancient gateway, dubbed Warren's Gate, between the ministry tunnel and the innards of the Temple Mount itself.

In a subterranean scene witnessed by reporters, police separated the two sides, who were on the verge of blows.

Government officials, alert to the explosiveness of the situation, hastily ordered the opening resealed and it remains closed today.

This gate and the steps which had apparently led up from it had played an important role in Jewish life in the medieval period, according to some scholars.

After the Muslim conquest in the seventh century, Jews were permitted to return to Jerusalem, from which they had been barred by Roman and Byzantine rulers. However, they were not permitted back on the Mount.

The closest they could come to it, according to Bahat, was the covered staircase inside the gateway, which came to be known as hame'ara, or the cave.

Some believe this was the principal Jewish prayer area in Jerusalem for more than three centuries, until the arrival of the Crusaders.

After the Crusaders were defeated, the gateway was blocked by buildings. It was only then, in the 13th century, that Jews began praying at what came to be known as the Western Wall.

As it progressed, it proved to be of increasing archeological interest. A few years ago, the tunnel, which had been called the "Western Wall Tunnel," was linked up with a water tunnel cut through the rock to the north, apparently in the Hasmonean period. This would lead to its becoming known as the "Hasmonean Tunnel." The water had been required in antiquity to clean the altar area on the Mount, where priests carried out sacrifices.

Bahat, formerly in charge of the Jerusalem District for the Antiquities Authority, contends that the finds here change conventional thinking about the history of the Temple Mount.

The Mount, built around 970 BCE by King Solomon as a platform for the First Temple, was roundish, conforming to the shape of the original hill.

This temple was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 BCE. Returnees from Babylonian exile half a century later built a new temple – the original Second Temple – maintaining the roundish shape of the Mount.

King Herod in the first century BCE rebuilt the Temple and doubled the size of the Mount, now near-rectangular.

According to Bahat, it has become apparent from the tunnel excavation that there was still another Temple Mount built, in squarish shape, by the Hasmoneans a century before Herod.

Despite Muslim displeasure at the tunnel's existence, it has aroused little public protest in the Arab sector until now, because it was out of sight. Several years ago, the tunnel was opened to visitors entering from the Western Wall plaza.

The authorities sought ways of opening an exit at the northern end of the narrow tunnel so that visitors would not have to double back some 380 metres to the entranceway.

The Sisters of Zion, whose convent on the Via Dolorosa lies near the tunnel's northern end, were approached, but they understandably declined to become involved in a politically sensitive issue. The Arab owner of a souvenir shop on the Via Dolorosa agreed to the opening of a tunnel exit on his property, according to Israeli sources, but he backed down for fear of Arab retaliation.

Preparations were then made to exit onto a public space on the street itself, but then-Likud prime minister Yitzhak Shamir was persuaded that it was not worth it to stir up a hornet's nest.

Finally, a staircase was built up from the tunnel to a point alongside the Omariya School on the Via Dolorosa, where only a nondescript stone wall separated it from the street.

This week, with Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert wielding one of the sledgehammers, the wall was pierced and a doorway fitted into the opening.

Ben-Dov says the mistake in opening the exit was not merely in the timing, but in the essence, since, in the political circumstances, it was clearly unacceptable to the Arabs to have the tunnel disgorge its visitors, many of them Israeli, into the heart of the Muslim Quarter.

"The Wakf was right in asking back then that I stop my dig under Al-Aksa, and the government was right in supporting them," said Ben-Dov this week. "I think that opening the tunnel exit was very unwise."

Clinton calls summit to defuse Mideast crisis

Cabinet secretary Danny Naveh, however, said that no prior understandings had been reached.

Clinton spoke by telephone last Sunday afternoon with Arafat, Netanyahu, Mubarak and King Hussein. White House spokesperson Mike McCurry said Clinton particularly wanted to thank Netanyahu and Arafat for accepting his invitation and to "encourage them to come to Washington in a frame of mind that allows progress to be made."

The Palestinians were hoping that Mubarak would attend.

"Egypt's role is important and we don't like to think of being there without President Mubarak," Nabil Shaath, the Palestinian minister of planning, said on CBS television.

Arafat was trying to convince Mubarak to attend, PLO officials said, since he wants Egypt as a counterweight to the United States.

But Egyptian Foreign Minister Amr Moussa said on CBS that a Mubarak no-show could be blamed on Israeli behavior in recent weeks.

Mubarak is annoyed that the situation in Israel "reached that level of insensitivity to the Arab people and the Arab feelings," Moussa said. "President Mubarak is definitely upset at the negative developments that have occurred and that the peace process, as it is, is really teetering. It is not in good shape at all."

In announcing the summit, Clinton acknowledged he was calling it because previous U.S. efforts had produced "not enough" progress toward calming the situation. He said he was prepared "to do everything in my power" to help end the violence and restart talks.

Immediately after Clinton's invitation to the White House summit, Netanyahu said for the first time that Israel was willing to "accelerate" the pace of the peace talks.

Some officials in the Prime Minister's Office have conveyed to the United States that they are not opposed to holding round-the-clock talks until an agreement on implementing the Oslo 2 accord is reached, but deny that Israel has formally consented to any such arrangement.

Netanyahu's foreign policy adviser Dore Gold met with top Palestinian negotiator Mahmoud Abbas last Sunday night to prepare for the two-day summit.

Israeli, Palestinian joint patrols halted in West Bank

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – All joint patrols in the West Bank have been put on hold, as the army is deploying more tanks around Palestinian-controlled areas and is steadily increasing the pressure on the Palestinians to stabilize the situation.

The Palestinian police appear to have gotten the message, but senior IDF officers say the situation could still erupt at any time.

Sunday was markedly more quiet than the previous days, as Palestinian police quickly stepped in to quell any sparks of unrest.

Two IDF soldiers were lightly wounded in stone-throwing incidents along the Israel-Egypt-Gaza border. The demonstrators also hurled fire bombs at the IDF position, but no damage was done, the army said, as the Palestinian police quickly dispersed the rioters.

In the Gaza Strip, joint Israeli-Palestinian patrols have resumed, but those in the West Bank have not. Senior IDF officers said there has been a total breakdown of confidence in the Palestinian police, who in some cases reportedly turned their guns on Israeli soldiers with whom they had patrolled only the day before.

Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Shahak has said that he was doubtful if the situation which existed before the crisis could be restored.

"The situation in which it is not clear when there is cooperation and when they are shooting at our soldiers is impossible and unacceptable," Shahak said.

Palestinian reports said more tanks were deployed over the weekend. In Nablus, for example, witnesses counted 36 tanks and armored vehicles dug in behind earthen ramparts a few hundred metres from the city limits. In Jericho, two dozen tanks and armored personnel carriers were sighted.

Under the third stage of the IDF's "Field of Thorns" contingency plan, the army is prepared to reoccupy Palestinian-controlled areas should the situation deteriorate.

Axworthy critical of Israel's actions

OTTAWA — Israel's actions in the lastest round of Mideast violence have been "unhelpful," Foreign Affairs Minister Lloyd Axworthy said in a statement last week.

Also "unhelpful" to the peace process has been Israel's decision to expand Jewish settlements, Axworthy added.

The minister expressed "deep concern" over the rioting in Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza. Senior representatives from Foreign Affairs conveyed the government's views to Israel's charge d'affaires and the Palestinian delegate general in Ottawa.

"I urge Israeli and Palestinian leaders to take immediate steps to restore calm," Axworthy said. "We are very anxious that the situation not deteriorate further."

Axworthy appealed to both sides to resume direct negotiations.

Stephen Victor, national chair of the Canada-Israel Committee (CIC), said he is "deeply saddened" by the death toll in the Mideast.

"While this should be a time for healing and not for recriminations, it must be pointed out that it is intolerable that many Palestinian policemen, who were armed under the terms of the [Oslo] peace accord to preserve order and enhance security, have turned those weapons on Israeli soldiers and civilians.

"[Palestinian leader] Yasser Arafat must bring his police under control and restore discipline among all his security forces."

Labor Party girds for leadership battle

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Mideast Analysis

The battle for the leadership of Israel's Labor party has begun.

Last month, after sending a series of mixed signals about his intentions, Shimon Peres finally announced that he would not be a candidate for prime minister in the general election scheduled for the year 2000.

Peres, who led his party to defeat in the May 29 election, disclosed that he would remain as leader until internal elections are held in July 1997.

Five individuals are scrambling to succeed him. They are Ehud Barak, Haim Ramon, Uzi Baram, Ephraim Sneh and Shlomo Ben-Ami, nearly all of whom have been cabinet ministers.

Barak, who declared his candidacy a good 10 days before Peres' recent disclosure, appears to be the frontrunner. Barak — the former chief of staff and Israel's most decorated soldier — was brought into government by the late Yitzhak Rabin and was successively the minister of interior and the minister of foreign affairs.

Barak's chief rival, Ramon, was the minister of the interior in the last Labor administration, and previously headed the Histadrut labor federation and served as the minister of health.

Baram, a seasoned politician who was secretary-general of the Labor party, was once the minister of tourism. In the party primaries last March, he finished first, ahead of Barak.

Sneh, who retired from the regular army as a brigadier-general, was the minister of health.

Ben-Ami, the least politically experienced of the lot, is a former ambassador to Spain.

So far, Peres has not endorsed any of his putative successors. "Barak has the qualifications to be prime minister," he allowed recently. But then he added this caveat: "There are a few other [party] members who have the talent to be prime minister. I don't rule out anyone."

As a result of Peres' disinclination to designate a hand-picked successor, the race is theoretically wide open.

And not surprisingly, the struggle for the heart and soul of the party has set off indecorous displays of mud-slinging, mainly between the chief contenders.

The recriminations turn on the last election. The Labor party won more Knesset seats than the Likud bloc (34 to 32), and under the old electoral system, Peres would have been called upon to form a government. But in the direct election for the prime ministership, Benjamin Netanyahu edged out Peres by a margin of 1,501,023 to 1,471,566, or one percentage point, and thus claimed the glittering prize.

In the runup to the election, Barak, 54, and Ramon, 46, played critical roles. Barak took charge of Peres' prime ministerial bid, while Ramon handled the party's media campaign in the separate Knesset contest.

In the bitter aftermath, Ramon, among others, was widely blamed for the party's failure to win re-election. Labor had defeated the Likud in 1992, and the majority of pundits were certain that Peres would defeat Netanyahu in 1996.

A report issued by the Labor party on Sept. 17 found no fault with its basic policy and message. However, Shevah Weiss, the author of the study, said that Ramon should have better exploited Yitzhak Rabin's assasssination and, furthermore, should have responded more forcefully to Likud's fanciful claims that the Labor party was soft on Jerusalem.

In defending himself of charges that he let the party down, Ramon has come out swinging.

Shortly after the election, he accused Barak and the party's pollster, Yossi Vadana, of sabotaging the party's election campaign by withholding vital information from him.

Around the same time, he attacked Barak for having tried to undermine Peres' position.

After Barak announced his candidacy, Ramon was particularly bitter, saying that "only a political novice and a rank amateur can so pompously declare that only he can save the party, and that he and he alone can beat [Netanyahu]."

Barak has exercised restraint in the face of these accusations, and called Ramon "one of the most important people in our party." This suggests that a deal may be in the making: In exchange for his support, Barak would give Ramon a leading role in the party.

If, as expected, Barak succeeds Peres, he will doubtless push the party to the right.

Barak, who has described himself as a hawk on existential problems and a dove on moral ones," believes that it must establish itself as a centrist party, shed its anti-religious image (fostered by its alliance with the left-of-centre Meretz party) and stop its movement "further and further to the leftist fringes."

Barak, who often speaks of peace with security, has assumed the mantle of Yitzhak Rabin, and is superbly positioned to steal Likud's thunder. No wonder he will probably be chosen as the Labor party's next leader.

Israel & the Jewish World

Let's give Middle Israel its voice

By AMOTZ ASA-EL
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

In spring 1967, an Israel far more besieged, perplexed and demoralized than the current one was led by a hastily assembled national unity government to one of history's most remarkable military victories.

During numerous periods of national angst in subsequent years – and in light of the 1985 broad coalition's impressive defeat of hyperinflation – the national unity formula became a near-panacea to many Israelis.

TUNNEL TURMOIL
Analysis

Was last week's example of tunnel vision a critical moment? Clearly it was. And is that old political option still out there? Politically speaking, it isn't.

But does the time-honored consensus that has worked so well in the past to break deadlock still exist? It certainly does.

And the sooner Natan Sharansky and Avigdor Kahalani – the two men destined to unearth Middle Israel – realize the full scope of the opportunity that has fallen into their laps, the better our chances will be of restoring regional sanity, cultural harmony and economic order to an increasingly chaotic landscape.

Last week's bloody events threaten to rip apart those delicate cooperation mechanisms which, saved from ill-conceived provocation and allowed to mature quietly, could help generate Israeli-Palestinian reconciliation.

No less grimly, the chain of events that culminated in this mayhem looms ominously as a reminder that Benjamin Netanyahu assumed office nakedly devoid of contingency plans and oblivious to the Middle Israeli inclinations that helped bring him to power.

The original sin behind the unrest was not the opening of the Hasmonean Tunnel, but Netanyahu's foolishly delayed meeting with Yasser Arafat and the failure to quickly carry out the Hebron arrangement.

All this would have been avoided had Netanyahu immediately understood that his election, while reflecting widespread disenchantment with some of his predecessors' policies, was by no means a license for machismo games.

Had Middle Israel wanted to destroy – rather than improve on – what Yitzhak Rabin and Shimon Peres had achieved, it would have voted en masse for the National Religious Party or Moledet. Conversely, had Middle Israel thought too little had been conceded, it would have voted Meretz.

But Middle Israel – i.e. the three out of four citizens who voted Labor, Likud, The Third Way and Yisrael Ba'aliyah – opted for neither extreme.

We Middle Israelis may differ on whether a Greater Israel is desirable, but we agree it isn't viable; we may differ on whether Arafat passes for a freedom fighter, but we agree that dealing with him is inevitable. We may differ on the magnitude and character of Palestinian self-declaration, but we agree it is imperative; we may differ on the future of the Israeli presence beyond the Green Line, but we agree that some settlements should stay put, that others should relocate and that all settlers should be treated with respect.

On the cultural front, we of the middle abhor the sight of the haredi fringe of society attempting to impose their will on us by force no less than we despise the sound of Shulamit Aloni besmirching biblical figures and inciting against rabbis.

In short, a broad Israeli consensus does exist, somewhere within that Bermuda Triangle of Yossi "Let's-give'em-everything-now" Sarid, Benny "We'll-never-give'em-anything" Begin, and Avraham "Get-me-Rehov Bar-Ilan" Ravitz.

Still, a national unity government as we have previously known it isn't an imminent option.

Unlike the cabinets of the Six Day War and 1985, which managed to put aside partisan considerations and concentrate on the issues, the two national unity cabinets of 1987 to 1990 failed to do so, primarily because the two major parties had grown into huge patronage machines whose hacks' insatiable appetite for public-sector jobs could no longer tolerate broad-based political partnerships.

Beyond that, under the new electoral system, it is much more difficult for the Knesset to force a change in the composition of his coalition on Netanyahu.

Which brings us back to the Sharansky-Kahalani trump card.

These two politicians complement one another, not so much because of their heroic stature in their previous lives, but because ideologically they embody Middle Israel and politically they stood up to the old establishment's systems of patronage.

Sharansky's blunt statement earlier this month in Hebron that concessions must be made was the voice of Middle Israel. Kahalani's insistence earlier that Netanyahu meet with Arafat was the voice of Middle Israel.

Sharansky's refusal to grant industrialists the easy-money subsidies they used to get from his predecessors is the voice of Middle Israel. And Kahalani's secular but humane attitude regarding the clashes over Jerusalem's Rehov Bar-Ilan was also the voice of Middle Israel.

Armed with their combined 12 Knesset seats, the stocky and balding Russian and Yemenite should in the near future together prevent Netanyahu from abandoning Middle Israel, as he has in his initial mistreatment of the Palestinian Authority. As regards the more distant future, they would provide that long-overdue Archimedean leverage that would return our decision-making process to where it belongs, in the broad mainstream.

This country isn't as divided as its politicians make it seem. There is a broad consensus here; it simply needs dusting off – not because it is sacred and not because it has been etched in stone, but simply because it is what the vast majority of Israelis dearly want and sorely need.

France toughens anti-hate laws

By LEE YANOWITCH
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

PARIS – The French government has drafted a bill that would toughen the country's hate-speech laws and make anyone who utters a racist statement subject to one year in prison.

Justice Minister Jacques Toubon hopes to present the bill to Parliament at the start of its autumn session next month.

But he has first asked the opinion of the National Consultative Human Rights Commission, which is headed by Jean Kahn who also serves as president of the Consistoire, the organization responsible for the religious needs of France's 600,000-member Jewish community.

Kahn said in an interview that the commission is "in the process of reflection and study," adding that it would present Toubon with its opinion of the bill after it meets later this week.

Loose-lipped laughmonger a Borscht Belt legend

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO – Jackie Mason, who performs his one-man Broadway show here on Oct. 7, says he was ordained as a rabbi but was laughed out of his first synagogue in Weldon, N.C., in the 1950s.

"As far back as you can go, they were all rabbis in my family," the celebrated stand-up comic said recently by phone from his home in New York, explaining that his father, three brothers and many ancestors were all rabbis.

"The furniture, the cats, the dogs, the horses...once you were in my family, you had to become a rabbi whether you liked it or not."

Mason, 62, was born Jacob Maza in Sheboygan, Wisc. He quit the rabbinate after one too many congregants told him he should be telling jokes instead of giving sermons. He followed their advice and took his show on the road.

Today, the loose-lipped laughmonger commands a top dollar on Broadway, where he has mounted several long-running shows over the past decade. Next month he is scheduled to give his fourth royal command performance for Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace.

"The queen is obviously in love with me," he quips. "She can't live without me."

The show he's bringing here is called Jackie Mason: Politically Incorrect. In it, he supposedly pokes fun at everything from sexual harassment to racism to the Clinton White House.

"This is an all-new show," he says. "I make it a religion or ritual never to repeat jokes from other shows. It's offensive to tell people the same jokes that they paid for on a previous occasion. For me, it's a religious taboo more important than Yom Kippur: not to eat on Yom Kippur, and not to tell yesterday's jokes."

Styling himself as an enemy of hypocrisy, sham and social pretension, Mason says he avoids "aimless, pointless" insults that belittle for no purpose. "I insult what I think are the nonsense and the lies that people go for. People tell their children not to lie, while they lie in business every day. People tell their children not to cheat, while they commit adultery every day.

"Everybody's so busy social-climbing, they make fools of themselves. That's why people buy a boat they can't use, just to show it off, and that's why they buy a house with 300 rooms. There's a new trend in exercise machines. Everyone has one, but nobody uses it. All they use it for is to hang clothes on.

"And lots of people are buying saunas. Where did you here of a Jew that wants to sweat? They spend a fortune buying an air-conditioner, and then 10 minutes later they buy a sauna."

Mason admits he's been called a bigot more than once and says there are certain subjects, including racial discrimination and segregation, that are for him untouchable in these politically correct times.

The former Borscht Belt legend, whose voice carries a Yiddish undertone, likes to satirize Jews in particular, but he's also a staunch supporter of Israel and the Jewish world. During the Persian Gulf War, he cancelled performances of his Broadway show so he could fly immediately to Israel.

"I feel a great concern and compassion with what the Jews are going through in Israel," he says. "I lost half my family in the Holocaust and I have many friends in Israel. When a war breaks out, I find I can't sit still in New York."

The show is at the Pantages Theatre, 244 Victoria St., Toronto, Oct. 7 at 8 p.m. For tickets, visit the Pantages box office or the Ford Centre, 5040 Yonge St. or call the Livent Line at 416-872-2222. Tickets are $25 to $60.

Playwright Gives Reading: Tomorrow I'll Be Dead is the sunny title of a new work-in-progress by playwright David Rubinoff. It is scheduled for a workshop presentation at the Bloor JCC, Oct. 3 at 8 p.m.

The comedy is apparently about a family that is coming down in the world. Rubinoff is the author of several previous works, including Marriage of Convenience, Tiny Addictions and Stuck. 416-922-6211.

Alternative Health TV Series: Motivational speaker Susan Stern is host of Healthy Alternatives, a new 12-part TV series on health issues set to begin this month on Rogers Community Channel 10. The series examines acupuncture, aromatherapy, attunement, chiropractic science, homeopathy, new approaches in dentistry, iridology, naturopathy, vegetarianism, vitamins and yoga.

Guests include Rochelle Stern, actress and breast cancer survivor, Helen Goldstein, director of The Yoga Studio, and Dr. George Freedman.

Woody Allen Verbatim: The London Jewish Chronicle recently scored an exclusive interview with the king of cinematic comedy, Woody Allen, at the deluxe Dorchester Hotel. The interviewer began by asking if it were true that Allen's mother was a profoundly funny person.

"I don't know where you read that, but it isn't true," Allen replied. "If she's funny, it's because she's a funny character, you know, she's amusing. She does not make witty remarks. Nor does my father."

Admitting that his family on his mother's side have a physical resemblance to Groucho Marx, Allen said his parents are happy with his show-business success.

"My family were very delighted with the good fortune I had. At first they didn't know anything about show business, or they just couldn't imagine what I was doing.

"They were not discouraging, but they had no feeling about it one way or the other. Then, when things started to succeed, they got a great deal of pleasure out of it."

Are his parents ever critical of his work? "They don't know enough about film or literature to be critical," Allen replied.

For Creative Writers: From Sept. 3 to Dec. 31, writers may receive professional counselling on novels and scripts at no charge from filmmaker and novelist Allan Wargon, the Fredelle Maynard writer-in-residence at the Metropolitan Toronto Reference Library.

The Fredelle Maynard Writer-in-Residence Program was established to assist unpublished writers realize their dreams, and to commemorate author, television personality and teacher Fredelle Maynard, who passed away in 1989. The program has been made possible through the generaous support of her husband, Sydney Bacon.

Several free lectures and seminars are scheduled. For more information, call Brenda Holz, 416-393-7014.

Guilt-Free Jewish Comedy: The Borscht belt arrives in Toronto this week as Yuk Yuk's Superclub unveils Yids In The Hall, a new monthly evening of "guilt-free" Jewish humor.

Hosted by Lou Eisen, the first show features Larry Horowitz, Lawrence Morgenstern, Kandi Abelson and Ian Sirota. "Yids in the Hall promises to be a night that's different from all other nights," says Eisen.

Yuk Yuk's Superclub, 2335 Yonge St., Oct. 6, 8:30 p.m. Admission is $10 for adults, $7 for students and seniors ("Bubbies & Zaydes"). Upcoming shows Nov. 24 and Dec. 25. Reservations, 416-967-6425.

Fires In The Mirror: Starting today, Oct.3, for a very limited run, WUM and Theatre Passe Muraille are presenting the Canadian premiere of Fires In The Mirror. Written by Anna Deavere Smith, this award-winning play, focuses on the Crown Heights rioting in August 1991 when a Jewish student was killed after a young black boy was run over by a car in a rabbi's motorcade. The Canadian Stage Theatre 26 Berkeley St. Toronto. 416-368-3110.

In Brief: Painter Charles Katz uses acrylic, oil and mixed media such as sand, marble dust and miscellaneous objects in his paintings. An exhibition of his work is on view through Oct. 14 at Gallery 104, at 104 Scollard St., Toronto. 416-927-0709.

• The Jewish Students Union (JSU) and the University of Toronto are offering Artistic Reflections of the Holocaust, featuring singer Jenny Eisenstein and poets Donia Clenman and Simcha Simchovitch. Oct. 9, 7 p.m. Earth Sciences, Room 149 (133 Willcocks at Huron). For details, call the JSU at 416-978-0422 or Rachel at 905-738-6055.

Wall Street backs Israeli markets

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

LOS ANGELES – Wall Street is bullish on Israel. Regardless of recent political changes, all the indexes are up, according to the heads of nine of the top publicly traded Israeli companies on Wall Street.

• Stocks of 83 Israeli companies are now traded in U.S. markets, primarily on NASDAQ, more than those of any foreign country, except Canada. The combined market value of these companies tops $32 billion (US), and by the end of 1996, about 100 Israeli companies will be listed.

• Venture capitalists are now investing more money in Israeli companies than those of Britain, France and Germany combined. In 1995, foreign investments in Israel increased by more than 140 percent.

•Stocks in Israeli companies actually perform better on American exchanges than on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange.

Correction

In the story "Ketubah company linked to the Net" (CJN Sept. 19 page 38) a few things need to be clarified or corrected.

The story implied Laya Crust and Ted Labow are living in Israel when in fact they live and work in Toronto.

GONE HOLLYWOOD

York Universtiy graduate Josh Chaiton, along with co-producer/director Marni Banack, won the Jay Scott Award for Best Overall Production for their 17-minute drama Cornerboys at the TVO's Telefest'96. Cornerboys also won in Telefest's long drama category, and craft awards for Best Script and Best Editing. Chaiton also won a second-place award in Telefest's Corporate Video Category. Chaiton's Animal Crackers won last year's Jay Scott Award, making him the first student to win top honors two years in a row. Chaiton and Banack are currently enrolled in a Master's program at the American Film Institute in Los Angeles.

Telefest is one of Canada's top student broadcasting competitions. This year 166 film and television works were submitted from students across Ontario. The winners will be honored at the Telefest gala, co-hosted by comedians Sandra Shamas and Rick Green on Tuesday, Oct. 15 in Toronto. For tickets call the Telefest Hotline at 416-484-2860.

Show looks at child sex slavery

By JOSEPH SERGE
TAB News editor

TORONTO — Fresh from winning an Emmy and a Gemini for The Plague Monkeys , Simcha Jacobovici and Elliot Halpern of Associated Producers bring another provoking documentary to television.

The Selling of Innocents, airing on CBC TV's Witness series Oct. 8, is a moving, disturbing and stark investigation into child sex slavery.

Despite being told numerous times this documentary couldn't be done, Jacobovici, Halpern and director William Cobban take their cameras deep inside the brothels of child-prostitution rings in Bombay, India.

In one of the highlights, the film crew captures a vigilante human right's group raid in progress as the group tries to rescue some of the girls from the brothel. The group scours the brothel finding girls hidden away by the madams – who were probably tipped off by the police – in literally every nook and cranny of the labyrinthian brothel.

A disturbing sequence shows a hidden camera capturing a father selling his young daughter to one of the procurers. The innocence on the child's face is obvious – she has no idea what she's being sold into. Another man talks proudly to the camera about the profits he makes from selling girls to the brothels.

We realize as we watch this film that few of these girls- some barely teenagers – can escape from this lifestyle and when their body is used up – by the time they're in their 20s – they will be discarded onto the road left alone to die of AIDS.

Jacobovoci and Halpern whose previous documentaries also include Expulsion and Memory: Descendants of the Hidden Jews and Deadly Currents have produced another excellent documentary bravely taking the viewer into a world few of us believe can really exist.

Business Profile

David Nitkin, president of EthicScan

Corporate ethicist tries to make the world better

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — David Nitkin, president of EthicScan Canada does not dream of a better world — he tries to do something about it.

As a corporate ethicist, and co-author of two books, The Ethical Shoppers Guide (Broadview Press) and Shopping With a Conscience (John Wiley & Sons Canada, Limited), he spends his time reporting on the social, environmental and labor performance of up to 1,500 Canadian companies using such indicators as affirmative action and job-creation programs, day care policy, environmental abuse, labor relations and charitable donations.

Nitkin, 51, formerly a strategic planner with the Ontario government, relied on the advice of two rabbis, Rabbi Avraham Feder, rabbi emeritus of Beth Tikvah Synagogue, and Rabbi Meir Tamari, head of the business ethics institute at the University of Jerusalem, before launching his business in 1987.

"I wanted guidance as to whether they thought it was feasible to make a career change, but I also wanted to find out if there is teaching in the Torah that would enable me to set ethical standards in place. I discovered that there are many Jewish principles in the business world. The basic notions of responsible behavior and respecting truth, property, democratic institutions and human life are found in the Chumash and in secular teachings. Judaism was very helpful in clarifying the difference between ethics, values, morality and the law.

"Values or mores, such as attitudes towards homosexuality or sex, change in the course of a generation. What is right at one point in time, may be wrong at another. Ethics, however, do not change and Judaism understands the difference between mores and ethics."

An interest in business ethics has resurged, Nitkin says, because "a lot of companies have discovered that they are not performing up to their own standards. In an attempt to downsize, a lot of middle management, often the knowledge base of the company, is being eliminated. This streamlining of companies has resulted in what we call corporate anorexia. Employees are overworked, underpaid, and are making wrong decisions. Companies are becoming afraid of their public image. There has never been such a demand for ethics.

"Ethics is fundamental to the well-being of a company. It affects the top line and the bottom line. An unethical firm harbors demoralized workers and as well, if a company cannot demonstrate that it wants to be socially responsible, then it will be vulnerable to competition. Many companies face enormous problems because they do not have their ethics together. Typically, companies approach us when they are already facing problems such as a lawsuit or media investigation."

In one case, Nitkin says, an advertising agency asked for an audit after a senior employee was found to be routinely padding the expenses collected from clients. In another, EthicScan was called in when a company discovered its branch manager was falsely billing clients. What we do, says Nitkin is try to enforce a code of ethics — try to set things right.

"Another of our services is to provide data for mutual and investment funds who want to invest in companies that meet the needs of socially responsible investors. We also do partnership screening, in which we take sensitive information that could affect a specific company if it were to partner up with another company."

An ethical audit, says Nitkin, is the social parallel of a financial audit. "It involves an examination of its workers, its customers and its competitors. Basically, we are trying to discover if a company is solid in its ethical performance — if it is walking its talk.

"We developed the 'sniff test,' in order to encourage employees to ask themselves such questions as how comfortable would they be if the reasons behind a particular decision were printed on the front page of the newspaper or whether this decision is fair, honest and reputable. If alarm bells ring, then the decision should be rethought. Each employee receives training through courses, mannuals or videos and they are given case studies to review. This way, each employee becomes ethically empowered."

Nitkin is president of the 22-member Ethics Practitioners Association of Canada, all of whom offer ethics consulting and code development work, but he is the first to do the work full time, and with three researchers and three associates working out of his home-office, his firm is one of the biggest.

"I have no desire to play G-d. I merely assemble experienced people who determine ethical standards and measure companies in terms of performance. Before any information is released, we assemble all the data and show the company what we have learned, in order to give them a chance to rebut and criticise. Our mandate is to provide information and let the public make its decisions. We are also trying to empower the public."

The Ethical Shopper's Guide, written with Joan Helson, Kelly Green, Amy Stein and the staff of EthicScan Canada, is typical of Nitkin's attempt to empower the public. The almost 300-page book is brimming with information about Canada's leading grocery and consumer products companies arranged under such headings as progressive staff policies, management practices, consumer relations, charitable giving and women's issues. Top companies in each category are placed on the honor roll.

In woman's issues, for example, Kraft General Foods Canada Inc. was placed on the honor roll, because nearly 40 percent of its workforce is women, as are nearly one-third of its managers, a figure Nitkin says is impressive compared to other companies.

Women at Coca Cola Beverages, according to his book, make up only 11 percent of its staff and seven percent of its management. No women are in senior management and only one sits on the 10-person board of directors. The company did get a place on the honor roll, however, for charitable giving and community involvement.

His second book, Shopping With a Conscience, includes sections on banks and trust companies, travel and transportation, entertainment, courier services, department stores, gas stations, hardware stores and drugstore chains. A third, entitled Ethics in the Grocery Cart is in the works and involves an examination of food, beverage, cosmetics and household products.

"It is written with the same philosophy — we ask questions and gather data. Unfortunately, some people do get upset. I was threatened three times before the second book was published," Nitkin says.

"I feel fortunate because few people get to do something they enjoy and make a positive contribution as well," says the husband and father of two daughters. "My PhD thesis was on utopian communities and since it was written, I've focused all my activities on making the world a better place. I get a great deal of satisfaction out of giving the people the power to choose."

Teen takes trio of gold medals at Maccabi event

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — For six days a week, Elizabeth Ben-Ishai loves to pound the pavement, grind out the miles and prepare for the running competitions that give her an adrenaline boost.

This past summer, Ben-Ishai's rigorous training regimen paid off with a trio of gold medals at the JCC Maccabi Youth Games in West Orange, N.J. The Toronto teen won the 400-metre, 800-m and mile events with relative ease, finishing a few seconds ahead of the next best runner in each race.

A 15-year-old Grade 12 student at the University of Toronto Schools, Ben-Ishai says she faces tougher competition at Metro Toronto and Ontario level games. But participating in the junior Maccabi was especially satisfying to her since she got to meet other young Jewish athletes and enjoy the social activities that are part and parcel of Maccabi events.

Camaraderie and competition are two of the qualities that attracted the Toronto-area teen to running. That and the ability to hit the road and "get away from school work and all hectic things," she said.

Elizabeth Ben-Ishai

Ben-Ishai has been running competitively at the U of T track club for only about one year, but in that time she's managed to win championships in 400-m, 800-m and 1,500-m races sponsord by the Toronto Secondary Athletic Association.

At the Metro level, she's won 800-m and 1500-m races while in an Ontario-level competition held in Kitchener, she was second in the 800 (her best event) and third in the 1500.

With summer over, Ben-Ishai has shifted to Toronto's ravines for the cross-country season, running four-kilometre races through the city's park system.

When that's done, she'll move inside for winter's indoor track season. Her goal is to shave off two seconds from her 800-m time to qualify for the Canadian junior championship. In the meantime, she's also looking ahead to continuing her running career in university.

Anthony Daniels, 16, blew away the competition in the shotput event at the Youth Maccabi, hurling the shot 33 feet, three inches. The silver medalist was more than two feet behind.

A Grade 11 student at Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT), Daniels is an all-round athlete who competed in nine different track and field events in Jersey: 100-m, 200-m,400-m, three relays, high jump (finishing fourth), long jump (also fourth) and shotput.

At CHAT he also throws the discuss and javelin and has represented the school in the Toronto District Collegiate Athletic Association finals.

WASHINGTON —Faced with a Yom Kippur dilemma, Milwaukee Brewers reserve catcher Jesse Levis decided to swing for the fences but he came up empty.

The Jewish holiday was originally slated as an off-day, but Levis found himself caught in a bind when a twice-postponed game between the Brewers and the Baltimore Orioles was rescheduled.

Levis, carrying a .243 batting average, elected to play rather than atone for his sins.

"It's not like I'm Sandy Koufax," Levis told reporters after the game in Baltimore, referring to the former Dodgers pitcher who missed a world series game in 1965 because of Yom Kippur. "I don't have that kind of leverage. I hope God forgives me."

Levis went 0 for 3, striking out once and leaving three runners in scoring position.

RED PEPPER SOUP

- 3 tblsp butter
- 1 large red onion, chopped
- 2 garlic cloves, minced
- 1/8-1/4 tsp. hot red chili flakes
- 6-8 large red peppers, seeded and cut up
- 2 1/2—3 cups pareve chicken broth
- 1/4 tsp. fresh ground pepper
- salt to taste
- 2 cups tomatoes, diced, strewed
- 3/4 cup skim milk goat cheese
- chopped, fresh basil to garnish (optional)

Melt butter. Add onion, garlic and chili flakes and sauté until soft. Add red peppers and cook for 5 minutes. Add stock, salt, pepper, and tomatoes. Boil and reduce, cover and simmer for 25 minutes. Cool and purée. Return to pot and add milk. Garnish each bowl as it is served. Yield: 6 servings. This soup is delicious served hot or cold.

About Seniors

Dear Jesse,

I am 77 years old, healthy, have many friends but still I have a problem. Most people have worse problems, but mine is mine.

My driver's licence limits me to driving in daylight. How can I continue to do all the things I love to do in the evening. I'm afraid to use public transportation at night because I have to walk two blocks. My friends are in the same position. Is there a solution?

MK

Dear MK,

You and your friends can form a group to organize a taxi pool or possibly hire a driver who would be available on specific evenings. It could be a student, who might want to earn some spending money or someone's grandchild or your postman. It will take effort to make it work but it will enable you to continue your activities and enjoy life.

Readers are invited to send any questions they have for Jesse to The CJN. Jesse is the executive director of Jewish Support Services for the Elderly (JSSE) in Montreal.

Negotiations resume in Erez

Parties will talk until solutions are found

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

EREZ CHECKPOINT, Gaza — The much publicized talks at the Erez checkpoint convened last week with the understanding that they will be virtually continuous until solutions are found.

Both sides brought radically different agendas to the talks, with Israel focusing on the Hebron redeployment and adjustments to security arrangements, and the Palestinians aiming to implement the entire agreement without changes.

"Today, we started the talks of the steering committee, after a difficult crisis which perhaps harmed the basis of the Oslo agreement and the peace process itself, and that is the base of faith and a sense of partnership. We will have to rehabilitate it through gestures of good will in order to renew this network of faith," said former chief of general staff Dan Shomron, head of the Israeli delegation last Sunday at the start of the meetings.

It was decided to immediately convene committees that will deal with Hebron redeployment, the economy and military and civilian matters.

"We intend to work at a hasty pace to reach an agreement in all these areas, so that we can continue with the Oslo agreement. Understandably, these committees have a need to see non-violence and reciprocity so that the process can continue and solutions can be found," Shomron said.

His sentiments were echoed by Saeb Erekat, the head of the Palestinian delegation.

"We have witnessed events in the past few days which show how important the peace process is, and we are determined to preserve the peace process and to give it every

In Kfar Darom, life goes on behind barbed wire fences

By LEORA EREN FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

KFAR DAROM, Gaza Strip – With its barbed wire fences and concrete barricades, sandbags and stockpile of grenades, newly erected sentry stations and hastily built embankments, Kfar Darom looked this week like a well-fortified army base. But to the 42 religious families who dwell in this isolated settlement in the heart of the Gaza Strip, Kfar Darom is just home.

A place with a great quality of life, wonderful neighbors, sandy beaches, nature and quiet, according to its residents who seem fiercely determined to convince visitors – and perhaps themselves – that life here is normal.

Feature

Shoshana Har Habayit, an American immigrant, and her husband Shaul joined the settlement just two months ago. "A nice, little house in a special community where I could learn Hebrew, raise a family and bake cakes," is what Shoshana says she found at Kfar Darom. Indeed, two weeks ago, as bullets ricocheted off the walls of her home, Har HaBayit baked furiously.

"It was a lucky thing too," she says. "There were so many hungry soldiers to feed when the firing finally stopped. And here I was with all these fresh brownies."

The firing stopped after a five-hour battle, in which IDF soldiers and armed settlers fended off an assault by an angry mob of Palestinians who quickly surrounded the isolated Jewish community. Unlike during the intifadah, the attackers didn't merely throw stones. Some were armed and fired directly at the settlement, many from adjacent rooftops. Families living in trailers were quickly evacuated to stone houses. But the bullets penetrated even the better-built homes like that

ISRAEL SEEKS DIALOGUE WITH ARABS

"Israel's highest aim is peace for all peoples in the Middle East," Israel's Foreign Minister Abba Eban told 4,500 people in Montreal.

"But peace continues to be denied and she'll not sit down and weep behind the river and wilt away but prosper and flourish even without peace and in spite of the Arab states' refusal to grant her recognition."

Eban reiterated Israel's preparedness to engage in "a complete dialogue" with her Arab neighbors as a necessary preamble to the solution of the intricate Middle East problems.

Half of Montreal's Jews will stay: survey

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Half of Montreal Jews surveyed this summer figure they will still be living in Quebec in five years' time, according to preliminary data.

The survey, to be released later this fall by FEDERATION CJA, asked "If you had to guess, where will you be five years from now?" as part of a lengthy questionnaire on the community's profile and attitudes.

The response from just over 500 households was: 50.7 percent think they will be in Quebec; 12.1 percent another province; 7.6 percent the United States; three percent Israel; 1.6 percent another country; and 23.5 percent were unsure.

FEDERATION CJA community planning director Maxyne Finkelstein, emphasizing that the numbers are "very preliminary," said she was not surprised by the response and the sense of uncertainty it indicates is not much different than that expressed in a similar 1990 survey.

"Obviously, we would like to see more people committed to staying, but I'm not alarmed; it's basically what we expected. It reflects the general feeling over the past decade," she said.

The sampling is considered representative of the Jewish community according to such factors as age, language and where they live. The survey, which consisted of about 75 questions, was conducted mainly by phone.

Finkelstein noted that there were dire predictions of a drastic drop in the Jewish population through the '80s, yet the 1991 Canadian census found a decrease of only 2,000 between 1981 and '91, when it was just over 101,000.

The census is the only accurate measure of the Jewish population and the next complete one will be taken in 2001. The mid-decade census, carried out this year, will not give a full picture because it asked only ethnicity and not religion, and then only of those minority of household who received the long form.

FEDERATION CJA demographer Charles Shahar said that's likely to underestimate the Jewish total by about 4,000.

Although the anecdotal evidence that Jews are leaving Quebec at an accelerated rate since the referendum last October is strong, there is no solid evidence of a significant net loss from such indicators as Combined Jewish Appeal's roster.

Campaign director Danyael Cantor said the number of names it is canvassing has actually increased this year over last. That's due to a greater effort to reach more potential donors and reactivate dormant cards, which has offset any population loss, he said.

Another important indicator, Jewish day school enrolment, has not yet been confirmed for 1996-97, said Association of Jewish Day Schools director Felix Meloul.

Day school enrolment was up slightly between 1994-95 and '95-96, from 6,986 to 7,054.

Immigration has remained fairly steady for the past four or five years, said Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS) director Joel Moss. Between July 1, 1995-June 30, 1996, close to 800 individuals or about 290 families arrived in Quebec, according to JIAS' knowledge. Ninety percent were from the former Soviet Union (FSU). Since June, the number coming has also been consistent with recent years, Moss said.

The great majority of Jewish immigrants are staying. "Ninety-five per cent" of those who came from the FSU over the past three years through the two "100 families" program in cooperation with the Quebec government are still here, he said.

PA human rights abuses chronicled

Last week in this space, I promised to reproduce excerpts from the testimony of Prof. Irwin Cotler on July 23, to the Subcommittee on International Operations and Human Rights of the U.S. Congressional House Committee on International Relations in Washington. The committee had convened to examine the condition of human rights for the Palestinians living under the governance of Yasser Arafat.

Cotler is known and highly esteemed as one of the world's leading authorities on the subject of human rights. His testimony to the legislators is highly credible.

As I wrote last week, Cotler pulls no punches. His testimony is hard hitting and decisive. He attests to the oppression of Palestinians' human rights living under the Palestinian Authority (PA). His aim is to improve their lot. But it is something more.

The purpose of his submission, which he makes plain, and to which he returns repeatedly, is to prove that "the promotion of democracy and the protection of human rights are indispensable to international peace and security...We shall either have both peace and human rights, or neither." Cotler is one of the very few people anywhere, able to make and to prove this assertion.

His testimony to the committee places the recent bloody clashes in the West Bank and Gaza in a more detailed, more accurate context. It helps us to better understand all of the tensions, not simply the political ones with Israel, suffusing Palestinian society. These internal tensions unavoidably effect relations between Israel and the PA.

Cotler's presentation to the legislators was organized into six themes. Space limitations allow me to reproduce only very brief portions of his testimony. Like stones skipping across the surface of a deep blue lake, the excerpts cannot plumb the full depths of what was said. Nor can they convey the breadth and the sweep of the material put before the committee members. But they can touch upon certain issues and mark them for our readers as being significant and worthy of their attention.

He chronicles 12 different kinds of human rights abuses in his report ranging from extra-judicial punishment, arbitrary arrest and detention, repression of dissent and "humiliation." His first observation sets the tone for the remaining 11.

"A generic concern, and overriding theme in all my discussions with Palestinian students, journalists, NGO activists and human rights monitors, was what Dr. [Eyad] Sarraj called the "corrupt, dictatorial, repressive" Palestinian Authority, with Chairman Arafat regarded as "the Symbol" of this repression.

On the subject of extra-judicial punishment, Cotler concluded: "As Palestinian witness testimony and documentary evidence reveals, and as conveyed to me in my discussions with Palestinians...the condition of human rights under the Palestinian Authority since 1995 has in fact worsened."

On the subject of the denial of rights while in detention, Cotler refers to a statement by Abigail Abrash on behalf of the Palestinian Centre for Human Rights in Gaza City and the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Centre on Human Rights: "This pattern of arbitrary and unlawful arrests underscores the serious and immediate need for the Palestinian Authority to establish and implement appropriate lawful procedures for dealing with individuals under arrest or in detention. These practices serve only to jeopardize the establishment of stable democratic institutions in the occupied territories, structures that are essential in securing a real peace." (My emphasis)

With each stroke of his legal presentation, Cotler paints a detailed picture of a grim and grey society, whose people seek freedom from their own leaders, who do battle against a manipulative, untrustworthy Authority intent on ruling by force but not by democracy.

In next week's column, I will excerpt portions of Cotler's testimony in which he examines Palestinian compliance with the Israel-PLO Accords: A Case Study of Human Rights.

As Cotler assiduously and forcefully contends, the degree to which the Palestinians are assured of their human rights by the PA will ultimately have a bearing on the degree to which peace will be secured in the area. MBD

Judge's letter meant to be private

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A Toronto newspaper columnist launched a "vicious" attack on members of the judiciary in the wake of a decision to stay proceedings in a case involving three alleged Nazi war criminals, according to a Federal Court judge.

The vitriolic tone of the column prompted her to send a letter last July to the columnist and a copy to the federal Minister of Justice, but the letter, quoted last week in the Toronto Star, was meant to be private, said Federal Court judge Barbara Reed.

"I considered it a private communication. That may have been naive of me ... In my view, [the columnist] made an incredibly vicious personal attack on members of the judiciary. I reacted because, that doesn't help, let's put it that way," Reed said.

Reed declined to release the letter, saying she would do so only after appeals in the case are completed and after the Canadian Judicial Council completes its investigation of the judges involved.

The issue that led to the column and Reed's response goes back to March 1 when a senior Justice Department official contacted Julius Isaac, chief justice of the Federal Court, about the slow pace of proceedings in the cases involving alleged Nazi war criminals Helmut Oberlander, Erichs Tobiass and Johann Dueck.

Isaac subsequently met with Judge James Jerome, who was presiding over the cases. When that became known to defence lawyers, they successfully argued that the independence of the judiciary was at stake. Judge Cullen granted a stay of proceedings, bringing the cases to a halt. Federal authorities have appealed the stay decision.

In Reed's letter, as quoted by The Star, she said the cases against the alleged war criminals were dismissed because of government errors. She also said Cullen had been unjustly criticized for his ruling and that the criticisms affected her personally.

"I have been presiding over a hearing all morning, my concentration wavering, wondering what our system will be like when we as judges are expected to make decisions in certain ways because the government wants them that way, or because the media wages a campaign," Reed stated in her letter.

"I am shaken by the thought of the vitriolic attacks I must expect to endure, if I make a decision unfavorable to the government — or with which members of the media do not find favor."

Cullen's decision was widely criticized by Jewish community spokespersons and other commentators for failing to weigh the issue of judicial independence against the need to bring alleged mass murderers to justice.

Correction

Ehud Barak has not changed his political affiliation. He is running for the leadership of the Labor party, not the Likud party , as was incorrectly printed in a headline last week. The CJN apologizes for the error.

Nemsila case going to appeal to examine legal question

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The case of alleged Nazi war criminal Josef Nemsila took another turn last week as a Federal Court judge certified a legal question that will be considered by the court's appeal division.

The question concerns the legal concepts of lawful admission and domicile and whether someone can attain domicile if they entered Canada as a result of fraud or deception.

"I am satisfied that this matter raises serious questions of general importance," wrote Judge James Jerome, in certifying the question. "My Reasons for Order represent a significant change in the law through their statement that domicile cannot be obtained if there was misrepresentation upon entry into Canada and may have an impact on a number of potential applicants."

Under Federal Court procedure, a trial court must certify a legal question before it can be heard on appeal. Nemsila's lawyers have suggested that by becoming domiciled in Canada under the 1952 Immigration Act, he was immune from deportation even if he lied about his wartime activities when he entered the country.

An Immigration adjudicator accepted that argument but Jerome overturned it on appeal. Nemsila's lawyers are now appealing Jerome's decision.

Nemsila, 83, was allegedly a member of the Slovak Hlinka Guard from 1933-45 and was a company commander of a unit of the alerted Hlinka Guard. He is also alleged to have been responsible for the arrest, detention, interrogation and execution of civilians during the fall and winter of 1944-45.

Kalejs scrambles to keep story straight

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Alleged Nazi war criminal Konrads Kalejs scrambled to reconcile his testimony last week with statements given to U.S. investigators in 1984 in which he suggested the mass shootings of Latvian Jews was an invention of Russian propaganda.

He also attempted to distance himself from remarks recorded by a Canadian Immigration officer in September 1995 in which he suggested it was the Russians, and not the Nazis and their Latvian collaborators, who murdered 27,800 Latvian Jews.

Last week, however, Kalejs told Immigration adjudicator Anthony Iozzo that in December 1941 he heard rumors that Jews had been massacred in the Rumbula Forest near Riga and that the Arajs Kommando (AK) had participated.

"Also, I remember that the Latvian people were disgusted by such mass murdering of thousands of people. Very disgusted," he said.

Those remarks prompted Justice Department lawyer Donald MacIntosh to refer Kalejs to a 1984 interrogation by the U.S. Office of Special Investigations in which Kalejs stated he heard about the shootings at Rumbula and Bikernieki only after the war and that they were products of Russian "propaganda."

Kalejs said that in 1984 he had been given only a week notice to prepare for questioning and he didn't have time to engage a lawyer. He then claimed the transcript from the 1984 interrogation was "wrong. I don't know what they wrote down. Did I sign this?"

MacIntosh then referred Kalejs to a report by Canadian Immigration officer R. Rodriguez in which Kalejs is recorded as blaming the Russians for killing 27,800 Latvian Jews.

Kalejs denied making that statement, questioned Rodriguez's "mental capacity" and pointed out he did not sign the document containing those remarks.

Kalejs, an Australian citizen, was interviewed by Rodriguez on two occasions when he attempted to return to Canada. Immigration authorities are attempting to deport Kalejs due to his alleged involvement in war crimes.

As the hearing entered its seventh month, Kalejs spent three days on the stand last week during which a number of inconsistencies emerged between testimony he gave at the hearing and at other times.

Asked whether in November 1941 he knew that Riga's Jews were confined to a ghetto, Kalejs said he heard "rumors" to that effect. Moments later he said people could see the ghetto when riding by on streetcars. The ghetto was in an Eastern suburb of Riga so sooner or later everyone knew, he said.

Sparred over wartime documents

Kalejs and MacIntosh sparred over wartime documents that place Kalejs in pro-Nazi killing units. Kalejs denied outright the authenticity of a wartime document signed by an SS captain that certified he served as an "oberlieutenant" in the security police and the SD of Einsatzgruppe A from Feb. 18, 1942 to April 26, 1942 and participated in three battles. (Einsatzgruppe A was a special unit assigned to murder Jews and communists in areas of the northern Soviet Union conquered by German forces.)

"I see this for the first time, this kind of document," Kalejs said. "It's coming from Russia or the former Soviet republic of Latvia. I'm very, very suspicious. They're falsified ... It's one of those many, many Russian-produced documents."

While denying the authenticity of that document, Kalejs told the hearing that in November 1941 he had knowingly obtained a false document from a former Latvian army comrade who worked in a police unit. He said he needed the document to show admissions officials at the University of Riga that he'd participated in anti-Communist activities.

Facing a deadline for admission and with another, true, document from a Latvian partisan unit late in coming, he asked a Sgt. Roze for the false document. It turned out, Kalejs said, that Roze's unit was the Arajs Kommando, which murdered Jews.

But MacIntosh pointed out that the AK document was dated Nov. 29, 1941, while the document attesting to anti-Russian, Latvian partisan activities was dated Nov. 21, 1941. Why submit a false document when the other, legitimate, document was available? he asked.

Kalejs said despite the dates, he received the AK document first. However, MacIntosh then read from Kalejs' U.S. 1984 interrogation in which Kalejs stated he received the "partisan" document first and submitted both it and the AK document to the universify at the same time.

He handed in the "false" document "for good measure," Kalejs said.

Later in cross-examination, MacIntosh referred Kalejs to a certificate dated Nov. 5, 1942, and signed by a Captain Ozols, which stated Kalejs had served in the Latvian Security Police (AK) since July 1941 and had also served on the Eastern front in February 1942. The document was submitted to the University of Riga.

Kalejs said the certificate was a pure formality needed because he changed faculties, but MacIntosh suggested he needed it because his AK activities were so extensive in 1941, he barely attended classes and was in the position of a new student applying for admission.

Kalejs denied that suggestion.

The two sparred over yet another document, signed by Dr. Jaunzems of the Latvian Auxiliary Security Police (AK), which certified Kalejs had no diseases preventing him from attending university.

"It's the first time today I hear about such things," Kalejs said.

Another point of contention was the availability of German stamps used to authenticate documents. MacIntosh suggested the Germans exercised tight control over the stamps, which were used on the AK documents Kalejs said were false. His suggestion was that the stamps would only have been used on legitimate documents.

Kalejs said that to help out each other, Latvians could get around the regulations.

CJC lauds black-Jewish cooperation

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Blacks and Jews in Toronto have made a "quantum leap" forward in good relations and there are plans for further cooperation, the executive of the Ontario region of Canadian Jewish Congress was advised at its Oct. 3 meeting.

"We have come a long way," said Ellen Cole, the region's community relations chair.

She noted that the black press did not give "anti-Semitic coverage" to the recent visit to Toronto of Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan. Just prior to Farrakhan's speech, she said, Congress distributed to black community leaders a package explaining that its opposition to his appearance in Canada was based on the fear that it would encourage hatemongering against all people.

The federal Immigration Department's decision to allow Farrakhan into Canada was "inconsistent" with its previous actions, Cole said, and Congress has sent it copies of anti-Semitic books sold at the meeting.

"There was such tight security by the Nation of Islam that there is no doubt that those materials were permitted in with their approval," she said. It is yet to be determined, she added, whether the anti-Semitic books were brought across the border or were already here.

In discussion, Cole acknowledged that Toronto's black community is fragmented, and no one group or leader speaks for it. However, Congress officers have had "warm and open" meetings with black MPP Alvin Curling, the Black Professional and Business association, Herman Stewart, president of the Canadian Jamaican Association and others.

An "extraordinary" result of these meetings, Cole said, was a request from blacks for help with fundraising tactics for a proposed community centre at Jane and Finch.

In other business, the executive was told that a commitment by the Ontario government to overhaul the entire education system offers an opportunity for Jewish day schools and other religious groups to make a plea for public funding.

"The opportunity is an exciting one and we will be greatly aided if the upcoming Supreme Court decision is positive," said executive director Manuel Prutschi.

A recent meeting with David Lindsay, Premier Mike Harris' principal secretary, on school financing was open and helpful, Prutschi said.

In his report on Israel affairs, Ontario region chair Moshe Ronen said Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat realized that he had nothing to gain if the Netanyahu government fell as a result of political turmoil over the Jerusalem tunnel, and that's why he was so silent in Washington.

At the summit, Israel was able to fend off pressure by world opinion and Palestinians got assurances that peace negotiations would begin again immediately, Ronen said.

With CJC president Goldie Hershon, Ronen attended the United Nations meeting in New York, where they met David Levy, Israel's deputy prime minister.

Ronen said Levy was able to avoid a "summit disaster" by shifting the meeting from Cairo to Washington with Netanyahu's agreement.

"One good thing from the summit is that it brought Netanyahu and Levy together and that's good for the Israeli people," Ronen said.

York University has agreed that it will continue its policy of closing on Jewish High Holy Days, executive member David Caplan reported.

Succah program focuses on women

By SIDURA LUDWIG
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Succah-By-The-Water proved to be more than just a fundraiser for women's projects in Israel. It was an evening celebrating women's voices in the Jewish community.

"Music is the way women have entered into Jewish cultural liturgy," said Aviva Zuckerman Schure, a member of the program's committee and host of the event.

"We're here to remember the songs and lyrics that Jewish women used to express their lives and Jewish experiences."

The fifth annual Succah-By-The-Water, held recently at the Harbourfront Tent in the Square, was organized by the New Israel Fund of Canada (NIF), which brings together Canadian and Israeli Jews, with a focus on strengthening democracy, equality and pluralism in Israel. It supports women's organizations and projects in Israel, such as shelters, rape crisis centres and the Israel Women's Network.

"We had three objectives when we began planning this evening," said Janet Solberg, vice-president of the NIF of Canada. "One, to raise money for women's projects in Israel. Two, to celebrate the Jewish holiday as feminists. And three, to make the holiday a meaningful experience."

Solberg noted the one rule the committee made about the evening was never to solicit funds during the holiday. This event was the exception, she said, because many women's rights in Israel — such as the right to a civil marriage or a legal abortion — are being challenged by the new government.

In keeping with the theme of the evening — A Harvest of Women's Songs — performers, including the Chai Singers, Batsheva and Phyllis Angel Greenberg, presented Yiddish, Israeli and Ladino music.

Guest performer Adrienne Cooper of New York, who comes from four generations of Yiddish singers, sang Yiddish tunes that were both traditional and modern.

Succah-By-The-Water expanded the tradition of the seven ushipizim, or welcoming the mystical seven male guests into the sukkah, by welcoming women, past and present. Participants were asked to line up at a microphone and call out names of female Jewish singers, poets or composers, and they spoke of teachers, artists and family members. One woman welcomed her grandmother — the first woman to graduate from her class.

Reform congregation started in Riverdale

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to the CJN

TORONTO – The east-end neighborhood of Riverdale is now home to a Reform congregation in addition to its 2-year-old Orthodox shul.

High Holy Day services held for the first time this year by the Reform group drew more than 300 local residents.

Tanya Luder, head of the volunteer committee that organized the services, said, "With the high rate of interfaith marriages [in Riverdale], we wanted non-Jewish spouses to feel welcome."

Cantorial services were provided by a volunteer trio of local residents who rehearsed for weeks. It was the first cantorial experience for all three women.

During the summer, a handful of people met with Rabbi Paul Golomb, executive director of the Canadian Council for Reform Judaism, to plan the services. He helped them hire a rabbi — Hank Skirball — for the holidays, while established Reform congregations in the Toronto area assisted by providing a Torah, machzorim, photocopying and art supplies for the daycare offered by the new group.

Riverdale Jewish community's first summer picnic tug of war.

"Their experience with Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur exceeded my expectations and theirs too," Rabbi Golomb said in an interview. "I felt that this is something that can really grow."

The Reform congregations are planning to continue to support the Riverdale group – as well as the Annex-based Downtown Reform Minyan – by having their respective directors of education lead programs downtown.

"They're physically not in proximity [to the Reform temples]," Rabbi Golomb said. "Rather than waiting for them to come to us, we're going to them."

This fall, Kolel: A Centre for Liberal Jewish Learning will give an introductory course in Judaism to Riverdale residents.

The seeds of the Riverdale Reform group were sown at a meeting last March. Many of those who attended felt that the existing Orthodox congregation did not reflect the needs of the community.

They decided to hold programs to gauge interest in a liberal egalitarian organization. Support has continued to grow. An impromptu community picnic in July drew 80 people, and most recently 25 families showed up to decorate a sukkah in Luder's backyard.

Luder is enthusiastic about the possibilities for the new group.

"We're going to start Sunday school and adult education. We're building a community here in Riverdale," she said.

Jewish fraternity to mark 50 years

TORONTO — A 50th anniversary reunion is planned for members of Beta Alpha Kappa (BAK), a Jewish fraternity that operated in local high schools from 1947 to the early 1960s.

The reunion will take place at 6:30, Oct. 30, at the Primrose Club. According to organizer Irving Green, a BAK past president, between 80 and 90 "frat brothers" are expected to attend.

At its height, BAK had 35 members who engaged in "fairly good clean fun," Green says.

Among the alumni are former federal solicitor general Robert Kaplan; former Canadian Jewish Congress president Prof. Irving Abella and lawyer Lloyd Fogler.

Activities included parties, outings, charity fundraisers and "smokers," at which new pledged would be met. A highlight was the annual Sweetheart Ball, held in February. Green says BAK sweethearts (dates to the fraternity's parties) are also invited to the reunion "to see what happened to the fellows they didn't marry."

Early BAK members attended Forest Hill, Vaughan, Harbord and Jarvis collegiate institutes. The fraternity later spread to Downsview and Northview Heights.

On display at the reunion will be nostalgia items like old issues of the frat's newsletter, Bakscratcher, pledge pins, alumni cups, photos and BAK clothing.

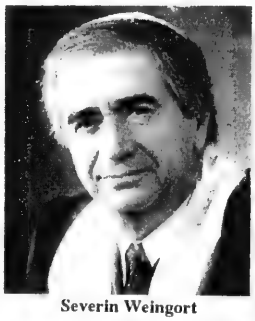
Temple Sinai cantor retires after 30 years

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter



Severin Weingort

TORONTO — Severin Weingort, Temple Sinai's first full-time cantor, is retiring after 30 years.

In that time, he has often taught two generations their bar and bat mitzvah lessons.

"Once we had a bar mitzvah for a man of 70 and his son was called up for the aliyah, just the reverse of what usually happens," he recalled.

The cantor has many good memories of his years at Temple Sinai, one being an article in the Temple's bulletin with the headline, "Opera's loss is our gain." Weingort left a peripatetic career in opera (his was the first voice ever heard at O'Keefe Centre, as the sergeant in Carmen) to take on the Temple job.

He will be honored Saturday Nov. 30 at a havdallah service and reception, followed by a cantorial concert.

Weingort was freelancing when Temple Sinai tried him out. "I was invited for breakfast and stayed for dinner," he laughed.

The 70-year-old cantor, a Holocaust survivor whose grandfather was the rabbi of Radom, came to Toronto at the age of 21 and met his wife Barbara, also a survivor, at Sunnyside pool. They've been married for 43 years.

"My wife is the real singer in our family but she won't sing in public," Weingort said.

Nevertheless, the magic of the stage and performing arts have touched their four daughters: Sharon Ventura of Whitby is an artist and teacher; Lori Cotton of Richmond Hill is a piano teacher; Karen Lower of Los Angeles is a film producer (her latest, Heaven Before I Die, was shot in Toronto); and Robin Rosenbaum of Vancouver is a singer and actor. Both Lower and Rosenbaum have taken their father's first name — Severin — as their professional surname.

"I tried my best to get one of my daughters to at least become a doctor or lawyer so we could retire on their income, but no such luck," the cantor said.

A lyric baritone, Weingort becomes the cantor emeritus at Temple Sinai and has no intention of retiring completely from singing and teaching.

He is in good health (he credits it to "piety and scotch") and plays tennis regularly at Maple Downs and Mayfair and golf now and then.

"I've never regretted giving up the stage to become a full-time cantor," he said.

The Weingorts have seven grandchildren, four in Richmond Hill, one in Los Angeles and two (twins) in Vancouver.

Conference to focus on Jewish future

TORONTO — How can Jewishness and Judaism thrive in a period of unprecedented changes in North America and around the world? What will the Jewish future be in the 21st century?

These and other questions will be addressed at a conference, Creating the Jewish Future, to be hosted by the Centre for Jewish Studies Oct. 19-21 at York University.

The conference will be chaired by Prof. Irving Abella. York professors on the organizing committee include Michael Brown, Sydney Eisen, Bernie Lightman, and Rachel Schlesinger.

The meeting will bring together prominent international scholars, faculty, student and community leaders, and communal professionals from Canada and abroad.

Expected to attend are Norma Joseph from Montreal, Israeli author Hillel Halkin, Toronto Rabbi Gunther Plaut and Daniel Elazar of Bar-Ilan University.

Presentations and workshops will assess current trends and suggest new strategies, policy guidelines and programs for Jewish continuity.

Approximately 300 people are expected to attend the conference, which aims to encourage dialogue between scholars and community activists and develop policies for the future.

It's being sponsored by Bernie Ghert, a local business executive, philanthropist and past president of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

Session topics include:

- The Centrality of Israel in the Jewish World
- Faith and Religion in a "Secular" Age
- The Future of Jewish Cultures in the Diaspora
- Educating for the Future
- Changing Gender Expectations and Roles in Jewish Communal Life
- Demography and Economics: The Institutional Response.

The conference is open to the public. Cost is $15 per person, or $5 for students. For more information, call the Centre for Jewish Studies at 416-736-5823.

On behalf of Jerusalem

The meetings last week of leaders in Washington and of negotiators at the Erez checkpoint were an effective and constructive conclusion to the bloody turmoil the preceding week in the West Bank and Gaza. As long as the sides are talking, it is unlikely that they will be shooting.

But not to be forgotten in the relief that accompanied the cessation of the killing and in the guarded optimism that flowed from the images at Erez, is the thorn among the roses. The pretext for the unrest, namely the opening of the tunnel exit in the Old City, was a shot across the bow of Israeli sovereignty over Jerusalem.

Among the incendiary statements Yasser Arafat hurled at the government of Israel prior to the disturbances, was the following: "We can't accept the Judaization of Jerusalem." (Our emphasis)

Arafat's words are absurd, akin to lamenting that trees fill the forest or that stars fill the heavens. For 3,000 years, Jerusalem has occupied our hearts, filled our prayers and pervaded our dreams. Jerusalem is the concluding call on Yom Kippur and on Pesach. It is the pilgrim's destination, the millennial magnet pulling on the compass of our collective memory. Jerusalem is Judaism's centre. Judaism is Jerusalem's fulfilment.

Some weeks ago on this page, we wrote that there will undoubtedly be a great deal of international pressure brought to bear on Israel to offer up some form of territorial or political compromise on Jerusalem for the sake of Arab honor and Palestinian dignity. Arafat's words should be an alarm sounding in the homes, in the synagogues and in the meeting halls of the Jewish world, a call to action stirring us wherever we live, to unite on behalf of Jerusalem. As we have noted before, only an undivided Jewish world can best withstand the calls for a redivided Jerusalem.

Robert Bourassa

Sixty-three years are too few for life's journey. But that was the extent of the temporal distance which Robert Bourassa, former premier of Quebec, travelled in his days on earth. Last week he died of cancer.

But there are other distances too by which life is measured. And on some of those other roads, one can observe that he travelled a longer way. He was a tenacious politician who devoted the most part of his adult life to service to the people of his province. Ironically, though fittingly, the statements about him in death are a mirror of what he was in life: complex, tentative and ambiguous.

He was very supportive of the Jewish community on matters such as public funding for Jewish education and strong, outspoken opposition to anti-Semitism and racism. He was also considered to be a friend to Israel; he received an honorary doctorate from Tel Aviv University. But on the one key issue which today dominates Canadian national discourse, his ambiguity is really all that we will remember. As Russell Copeman has written elsewhere in these pages: "Whether he was a strong federalist depends on who you talk to, and when. On the day after his death Montreal's La Presse ran a story calling Mr. Bourassa a strong federalist. Many English-speaking Quebecers thought he was a closet separatist."

He could not fathom or thus properly judge the depth of the passion that marked the non-francophone community's loyalty to individual rights. Indeed many commentators outside Quebec have noted that it was Bourassa himself who doomed "Meech Lake" to failure when he invoked the notwithstanding powers of the Constitution to override the ruling of the Supreme Court declaring unilingual, French only, signs illegal. That failure subsequently proved to be the turning point in the debate with the separatists.

His undoubted love of Quebec was always stronger than his belief in Canada. That will be the legacy of Robert Bourassa.

Tragic Rabin loss united Montreal Jewry

As we quickly approach Nov. 4, the anniversary of the assassination of then prime minister Yitzhak Rabin, I am reminded constantly of the outpouring of emotion and solidarity shown by the members of our Montreal Jewish community.

Within a few hours of hearing the tragic news, a vigil of a few hundred people (mostly students) was organized. They gathered in a park in downtown Montreal, across from the consulate of Israel to mourn the loss of a great statesman and leader. Two days later, over 4,000 people attended a memorial service at the Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue.

Many commemorative ceremonies took place to perpetuate the memory of a great leader, a man who devoted his entire life to protecting the security of the State of Israel and wished so ardently to see the peace process continue. Plaques were unveiled, parks were renamed and rededicated, universities set up scholarships in Rabin's name and memorial funds were established, all in order to enshrine forever the memory of the slain prime minister.

I recall as a participant in the February 1996 Mission to Israel that all groups included in their program a step at the murder scene near Kikaer Malchei Square (now named the Yitzhak Rabbi Square) and at his gravesite atop Mount Herzl.

Nov. 4 will come and go like any other day. Still we will all remember where we were and what we were doing when we heard the dreadful news. We will also remember how such a tragic incident brought our community even closer together.

Congress was right on Galganov issue

Bloc Quebecois leader Michel Gauthier is asking Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) to disassociate itself from the activities of Howard Galganov.

Whatever you think about the substance of Galganov's political activity, no one can deny that he has been doing his job with consistency, guts and imagination, and these qualities invariably bring respect to their bearer. Galganov stated explicitly that he acts, not on behalf of any particular ethnic group, whether it is Jewish or anglo, but in his capacity as a Canadian citizen. None of his opponents can deny him this, his sacred right, as long as we want to stay within the basic rules of a democratic play.

In view of this, Galganov's civil and strictly non-ethnic stand, you can attack him on the substance, but the moment you attack his ethnicity you are out of a civilized politics. That was exactly what the leader of the official opposition in Canada did.

If the CJC had condemned Galganov's political activity, it would have meant two fundamental things. First, a specifically Jewish body would have openly associated itself with the French side in the French-English ethnic dispute. Second, individual Canadians of Jewish ethnicity would have been restricted in their political rights.

Since Galganov, in his capacity as a Canadian citizen, not as a particular ethnic, used the word "bastards," it is up to him alone to apologize or to stick to that definition. No Jewish body bears any responsibility for that.

Second and far more important, reports on the issue were full of referring to Jewishness as to a "religion." Yes, Jewry is associated with a specific religion, but the CJC is not at all a religious body and neither did Galganov's political activity have anything to do with any religion.

Another view on closing Bar Ilan Street

The article by Viva Press in the Opinions section (CJN, Sept. 12) about the closing of Bar Ilan Street needs some response, since her observations are obviously very biased.

I am part of a family of Orthodox Jews, a teacher and psychotherapist by profession, and I object to the one-sided viewpoint which seems to reveal a biased attitude.

I, too, was at the demonstrations and had a "hands-on" view of what occurred.

Unfortunately, I saw haredi Jews being beaten with clubs. So as not to speak lashon hora, I will not expand more on what I witnessed, but I will say, for the sake of fairness and clarification, there is another side to the picture than what was written in the article.

The 120,000 Orthodox Jews demonstrated to honor the Holy Shabbat in a respectful, peaceful and organized way, in accordance with the direction of their leaders who warned them to be careful not to desecrate the Sabbath or profane G-d through undesirable actions.

When the demonstration ended, a small group of irresponsible individuals reacted in violation of their leaders' direction. They were provoked by the Meretz party who were deliberately trying to incense and interfere with peaceful demonstration by cruising around in convoys.

The Haredim are not trying to impose their beliefs on others. They just don't want to be prevented from following them. And where else should they be able to follow their right to observe the Shabbat than in their own country?

Perspectives

Prime Minister Netanyahu's first 100 days

By DAVID NEWMAN

New governments are normally allowed 100 days of grace in which to sort themselves out and get their new administration smoothly functioning. The 100 days of the Netanyahu government are now up and the first evaluations are not good.

There is, of course, no logical reason why the Netanyahu government should have continued to implement a policy to which it is opposed. It was elected on a different platform from that of the previous Labor government, and it was to be expected that it would undertake a different course from that of its predecessors. There would have been little point in holding elections were that not the case.

But since coming to power, the Likud, and Benjamin Netanyahu in particular, often seem unaware they have left the election campaign behind, and that they must now transform their deeds into action. Their oft-repeated slogans, some of which helped them in their narrow victory at the polls, continue to emphasize their commitment to the continuation of the peace process, while their actions demonstrate the opposite.

When Netanyahu came to power at the end of May, it was not clear what direction his new government would take. The new administration is composed of parties with contrasting views and policies. At least three of the major coalition partners — the Third Way, the Russian immigrants party and Shas — support the active continuation of the peace process. All of these parties could, and probably would, have equally entered a coalition government headed by the Labor party had those 15,000 votes fallen the other way.

Providing a counterweight to the "centrists," the National Religious Party, together with many members of the Likud itself, are not in favor of continuing the process, certainly not in its Oslo format, support the widespread expansion of West Bank settlements and vehemently oppose any form of Israeli redeployment in Hebron. These groups had been the most active opponents of the previous government and had provided the activist support for the Netanyahu victory.

The 100 days have passed and with them, our hopes. The violence that took place two weeks ago, leaving 14 Israelis and 60 Palestinians dead, has put an end to any lingering hopes we may have had. The government is accused of incompetence, of having deliberately brought the peace process to a halt by its refusal to honor agreements signed by the previous government. The government is accused of having adopted a dismissive tone towards the Palestinians, a tone which no longer represents a dialogue between equals.

For its part, the government accuses the left of having allowed the Palestinians to become armed in the first place, ignoring the fact that there had not been a single incident of a Palestinian armed policeman using the weapons against an Israeli soldier or settler in the previous two years.

Peace processes are not simply about the technical arrangements agreed to by the two sides. They are equally, and perhaps even more so, about the mutual dignity, honor and respect which is painstakingly built up between people and groups who, for decades, have hated each other. The symbolic actions, such as the handshakes, and simply getting to know the people with whom you are negotiating, are central to any drawn out process of negotiation. These have been thrown aside during the past three months, causing a renewed and even more intense resentment than had existed prior to the commencement of the peace process. To have never had anything, as was the case for the Palestinians during the intifadah years and prior to the Oslo II accords, was for them bad enough. To have had something tangible and to see it beginning to slip away, was much worse. It was only a question of time before such violence would break out.

The government still has a few weeks of grace left. This will come to an end when the American presidential elections are held. Prior to the elections, neither candidate will make any statements which may alienate their Jewish support. But once a president is elected, we can expect to see far greater pressure being exerted on Israel.

Can the Netanyahu government bring about the next stage of conflict resolution in the Middle East? Can it return to the days of a Likud government which made the most important of all peace agreements, that with Egypt at Camp David? Or will it go down in history as the government which was handed a peace process on a silver platter and which, either through determined opposition or simply bad tactics, threw the opportunity away? The government should not make the mistake of assuming that the cessation of the Oslo peace process will simply return the situation to that which existed some years previously. New realities create new facts, something which has been brought painfully home to those families who have lost loved ones during the past few weeks. The alternative to conflict resolution is conflict and all the violence and bloodshed which accompanies it. However painful the process, Israel had commenced the difficult road towards conflict resolution. It is a chance which, if it is not already too late, must not be thrown away.

By MEYRAV and DAVID WURMSER

In late February and early March 1996, a series of bombs ripped through Israel, topping off what had become the worst year of terrorism since Israel's earliest days. The key assumption of the peace process, a "land for peace" barter, was on trial. Israel had fulfilled its part of the bargain and ceded land, but the peace they were to have received in return eluded them.

The Netanyahu government came to power with a mandate from the electorate, not necessarily to reverse the 1993 and 1995 Oslo agreements, but to slow down or freeze their implementation until Arafat proved he could handle the responsibility he had been given and develop the territories over which he ruled, before he was granted more land.

These narrow parameters confined the Likud government. On one level, this posed an ideological challenge to Likud. Oslo changed the circumstances on the ground; a new government would have to deal with these new circumstances. It had to deliver security to Israelis, but it was not free to operate outside the framework of the Oslo agreement-based peace process.

After a rancorous and still simmering internal debate, the Likud party decided not to reject Oslo categorically, but instead accept the agreements conditionally. As Likud's party platform stated, it would "carry out negotiations with the Palestinian Authority to achieve a permanent peace agreement, on the condition that the Palestinians fully honor all their obligations." Most important among these were that the PLO fulfil two basic conditions: annul its charter, which still called for the destruction of Israel; and prevent terror and incitements against Israel.

Immediately after taking office, the Likud government faced the difficulty of upholding Israel's side of the Oslo bargain — the withdrawal — without seeing progress in PLO compliance. PLO incitement to violence continues, though the first Oslo agreement of 1993 specifically and clearly prohibited this. The PLO continued to balk at changing its covenant, setting up a committee to study the issue instead. Major Palestinian institutions in Jerusalem, such as Orient House, continued to function, and new ones, such as a land registry, opened up (although the minor Palestinian sports and recreation offices were closed). And the thug-like operations in Jerusalem of the PLO's Jericho head, Jibril Rujoub, continued. All along, the verbal blackmail, wherein the PLO threatened an armed uprising the moment Israel's concessions stopped, hung over the new government like a sword of Damocles.

The Likud government was trapped. Likud either had to enforce PLO compliance unilaterally, which would have ended the Oslo experiment, or abandon the one key principle which had informed its creation: tie adherence to Oslo with PLO compliance. The former was unthinkable politically until now because of the certainty that war with the PLO would ensue. The latter ensured a further deterioration of the situation.

As a result, the Likud had to spend its first 100 days soothing the international community and Israelis about its reasonability. The more active policy implied by its guidelines, tie adherence to the Oslo agreements with the PLO's behavior, had in the short term to yield to a passive, reactive policy of freezing but upholding Oslo despite PLO violations.

Politically, this was also problematic: demanding compliance while engaging the PLO, without linking the two, created the impression of a government adrift. It seemed as if 100 days after its formation, the Netanyahu government was still searching for its way, unsure whether it would uphold the Oslo agreements despite the Palestinians' failure to comply with their obligations.

But the riots that erupted on Sept. 24 have presented the Likud with a new political reality. The key assumptions of Oslo agreements were shattered by the events of the last few weeks. The PLO, which was committed under Oslo to abandon violence against Israel, for months verbally threatened an armed explosion. Last week, it became a reality. Troops from every division of the Palestine Authority's police, which Israel helped create and arm, went to war with Israeli soldiers.

Israel finds itself now with less peace than before Oslo. Four years of Labor have placed Israel opposite an army, where before it faced rag-tag gangs of stone throwers and knife wielders. Along with Israel, Likud now finds itself at a crossroads. The Likud government now faces its first real test. The current crisis over Jerusalem frees the Israeli government from insurmountable problems which Labor's Oslo process had brought to Israel. Israel can now make a clean break, because the Palestinians have once again seized "an opportunity to miss an opportunity."

Israel, and the Likud, now have an opportunity to return to the beginning and implement the policy the Likud party originally called for: abandon Oslo — which had been built on faith in the PLO's and Arafat's reformed nature — in consonance with the PLO's violations of the terms of its probation.

Making sense of the chagim

By Viva Press

Apples and honey symbolize the celebration of our new year in September. Ten days later we abstain from eating and drinking. Then, after an interim of a few days, we sit and eat our meals outside in huts. And finally on the ninth day, we dance around holding scrolls with crowns on top.

For a Jewish person, these four weeks follow a traditional pattern. But, for a number of my non-Jewish friends, many of whom are also non-religious and not familiar with the Hebrew Bible, these events seem random and bizarre.

Rosh Hashanah was the first Jewish holiday of this new school semester. Most of my friends had remembered from previous years that I celebrated my new year at this time. But, when they overheard me saying to my Jewish friends, "May you be inscribed in the Book of Life," puzzled looks were again directed at me.

My non-Jewish friends who had just begun to understand that we pray and repent so that we may have a good year, were mystified when they learned I was going to be fasting 10 days later. Over and over again I had to field the obvious question: "Why do you fast?"

My friends were shocked to find out that not only was I going to forgo eating for 27 hours, but that I was also not going to drink! Their experience of fasting, whether for health reasons or as part of a demonstration, included the abstention from food, but not from water.

I explained that we fast so that we are freed from all material concerns, that we enter into a state of exaltation and can devote the whole day to prayers. But not drink? They were still confused.

At this point, I'd like to thank TV mogul Aaron Spelling. His popular show Beverley Hill 90210, saved me having to try to explain myself many more times. During the 10 days of repentance, Spelling's show aired an episode in keeping with the Jewish holidays. A Jewish character was seen coming out of a synagogue and telling his friends that it was up to G-d whether or not he would be written in the Book of Life. After seeing this episode, everything I had said up to this point in reference to our customs was clear to my non-Jewish friends. They understood that I was not going to wither away from my fast. Thanks, Mr. Spelling.

Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur are holidays that are celebrated in one's home and in the synagogue. But Sukkot poses another question. What are those huts doing in people's backyards? Ahhh, yes. The huts.

Because I live above a store, I don't actually have my own sukkah. I do however visit other people's sukkot and I go to the congregational sukkot at the two shuls here in Halifax. My friends are equally curious about the sukkah itself and about the Four Kinds — lulav, etrog, myrtle and willow — that are a part of this holiday. Each of the Four Kinds is said to represent a different type of Jew. And so, by waving them together we are showing our oneness as a people.

My roommate remembered last year when I waved the lulav and etrog in all directions signifying that G-d is everywhere. And so, explaining that the sukkah is a place in which we are completely surrounded by G-d's presence, was easy. I informed them that to commemorate G-d's love and protection, we are commanded: "In sukkot you shall dwell, seven days" (Lev. 23:42).

From celebrating the creation of the world all over again at Rosh Hashanah, to being forgiven and cleansed by G-d's mercy at Yom Kippur, to being united with G-d at Sukkot, the only thing I had left to explain was why we rejoice with the Torah at Simchat Torah.

My friends are already familiar with the fact that we read a portion of the Torah each week. And so they understood that when we reach the end of the Torah, we immediately begin again. The dancing and singing reflects our happiness, the happiness that we derive from the continuation of studying G-d's Torah.

I'm happy that I have made some sense of our customs to my friends. While I look forward to our next chag, Chanukah, I have a sneaky feeling my friends have already started a list of questions to ask me.

Peace process faces new challenges

By Ilan Gewurz

There is a stong consensus within Israel that the violent confrontation that occurred between Israeli and Palestinian forces was not merely a reaction to the opening of the tunnel in the Old City of Jerusalem. Rather, it reflects fundamental flaws which currently plague the Oslo peace process and the pace with which it is moving. Unfortunately for the leadership of the State of Israel, that is where the consensus ends.

Israelis from all parts of the spectrum have taken to the streets over the course of the last week, and it seems as though both sides have managed to interpret the recent events in a manner supportive of their respective political points of view. Every public bus has been turned into a forum for political debate, revealing a very nervous society unsure of what lies ahead.

The political right in Israel emphasizes the fact that Palestinian police opened fire on Israeli soldiers with guns that had been given to them by the Labor government. They blame former prime minister Shimon Peres for having advanced the peace process too fast, creating an untrustworthy armed Palestinian force.

Members of the political left criticize Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government for stalling on the peace process. They argue that the depressed economic reality in the Palestinian self-rule areas and the view among Palestinians that the Likud government is not serious about the peace process have resulted in a sense of frustration among local Palestinians who no longer see their best interests served through their "peace partnership" with Israel.

While the former group concludes that Israeli security should remain exclusively in the hands of Israelis, the latter emphasizes the need to increase the pace at which the peace process is implemented. Upon examining the nature of the peace agreement however, it becomes apparent that both arguments are seriously flawed.

One of the central visions behind the Oslo process was the creation of an alliance of moderate Palestinians and Israelis that would be able to overcome radical opposition on both sides. The agreement called for a high level of cooperation between the IDF and what has since become the Palestinian police. The two forces conduct joint patrols and share information regarding a number of security issues, including the movement of suspected terrorists. The peace process brought with it a new reality in which Israeli security was no longer exclusively in the hands of Israelis.

Essentially, the call to keep Israeli security in the hands of the Israeli army is a rejection of the peace process. It would require the re-entry of the IDF into the Palestinian self-rule areas to physically disarm the Palestinian police, which besides bringing about international condemnation, would put Israel at war with the Palestinians.

The flip side of the coin, which argues that only tangible benefits of peace will enable people to truly identify with the process, requires the government to embrace the peace process and move forward with its implementation. That entails more than only verbal commitment accompanied by the continued building of settlements. It entails concessions which will show that the Likud government is serious about peace.

This argument, that moving forward with the peace process is Israel's most effective way of responding to obstacles to peace, is less credible now. Unlike past challenges to the peace process, the most recent confrontation was not an act of extremists but rather one that included the Palestinian police themselves. Thus, the argument that Israel must continue to strengthen the alliance with the moderates to overcome extremist opposition does not hold as true. How can Israeli troops be expected to conduct joint patrols or rely on information given to them by a police force that was so quick to turn around and fire on them?

The fact that the Palestinian police force was willing to turn against Israel as soon as they felt their best interests were not served through cooperation has had a tremendous impact on the way Israelis view their Palestinian partners. The peace process now faces a new challenge, not from extremist opposition, but rather from the damaged perceptions among the moderates.

Life on Mars?

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

Bug-eyed Martians have flitted through science fiction for many years, and any number of films have used the invasion of extra-terrestial beings as their main theme, the latest being Independence Day. The perennial (or perhaps it is "increasing") preoccupation with such phenomena testifies to an underlying conviction: There are a billion stars in the universe and from a scientific point of view it appears reasonable (if not likely) to conclude that some forms of life exist out there, and not just on our little planet Earth.

I will not devote this column either to science fiction or to a scientific examination of the statistical likelihood of extra-terrestial existence, but the latest revelation of traces of microscopic life forms on Mars has occasioned a flurry of enquiries. The writers want to know how such a revelation squares with the biblical creation account, which we are about to read from the Torah when the new cycle of weekly readings recommences. Coincidentally, a recent issue of the Jerusalem Report has a two-page essay entitled: Mars and the Jewish question.

None of the religious and scientific authorities asked by the Jerusalem Report whether the recent scientific finds have any impact on Torah and the faith, felt that there was a problem, and neither do I.

To begin with, the Torah is not a scientific textbook and does not teach astronomy. Its theme is God's creative power and the centre of its concerns is the earth, culminating in the creation of humanity. Extra-terrestial existence is thus not dealt with in the Torah's tale of creation: it is neither surmised nor rejected.

The essential difference between a theistic and non-theistic view of creation is simply that in the latter, the development of life is based on random physical occurrences, while the theist (and of course the Torah) proceeds from the belief that God, the supreme architect, created this world, this earth, this humanity. The non-theistic position excludes purpose, the theist takes the opposite view.

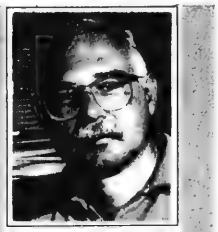
I like the brief formulation by the head of U.S. Space Agency (NASA), Daniel Goldin:

"I don't believe that with what we have found so far, Judaism needs to take stock. I think the fact that we might have found an ancient form of fossilized single-cell life does not check any of the foundations of Judaism and I believe that it is in the Jewish tradition to explore and understand and not to jump to conclusions."

In my view, living forms are likely to exist elsewhere. That contemplation is neither threatening my faith nor does it detract me from concentrating on my responsibilities towards God and creation. Speculation is of course part of being human, but I venture to say that we are not likely to meet intelligent extra-terrestrials in the flesh. If they do exist, we might be able to communicate with one another and exchange video views. But the adventures of Star Trek will have to remain where they are: on film.

The Kirshner File

The Soviet role in the Yom Kippur War



By Sheldon Kirshner

There has been an avalanche of books about the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, the 23rd anniversary of which was marked this week. But to the best of my knowledge, Inside the Kremlin During the Yom Kippur War (Penn State Press, $29.95 US) is the first insider's account of the Soviet decision-making process during that three-week crisis.

The author, Victor Israelyan, had a bird's eye view of the proceedings, having been a senior Soviet diplomat. Israelyan, who retired from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs four years before the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991, was a member of a task force which monitored the war for the ruling Politburo. He reported directly to his boss, then foreign minister Andrei Gromyko.

Neither Gromkyo nor Leonid Brezhnev — the general secretary of the Communist party — supported the joint decision by Egypt and Syria to attack Israel on Oct. 6, Israelyan writes in this candid memoir. Indeed, the Soviet leadership did its best to talk Anwar Sadat and Hafez al-Assad out of launching their offensive in the Sinai Peninsula and on the Golan Heights.

Once the war started, he relates, Brezhnev expressed disappointment, saying it would whip up international tensions and complicate Moscow's ties with the United States. What is more, Brezhnev predicted a speedy Arab defeat.

According to the Soviet Union's ambassador in Damascus, Syria's objective was the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the territories and the restoration of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians. Syria believed that Israel would sue for a ceasefire, on terms favorable to the Arabs, after the first shattering Arab blows. Assad, naively, was of the opinion that Syria and Egypt could complete the military phase of the campaign within two days. He certainly underestimated Israel.

As Israelyan indicates, the Soviet Union did not share Syria's optimistic assessment. Moscow thought that without the broad assistance and participation of Soviet advisors, Egypt would not breach Israel's defence line along the Suez Canal, nor would Syria recapture the Golan.

Despite initial Arab battlefield successes, Victor Kulikov, chief of the general staff, was skeptical about Egypt's and Syria's military doctrine. He criticized them for not attacking Israel's rear flank. He took them to task for not trying to gain air superiority. And he belittled their ability to sustain a coordinated offensive.

Perhaps, as Israelyan suggests, this was a case of sour grapes, the Kremlin having been miffed that neither Syria nor Egypt had officially consulted with Moscow on either military or political strategy before Oct. 6.

"The relationship between the Soviet, Egyptian and Syrian leaders on the eve of the war was far from open and trusting," Israelyan admits.

This admission will not surprise observers who followed the Soviet Union's sometimes fractious relations with the Arab world in the 1970s. From Sadat's ouster of Soviet military advisors in 1972 to Moscow's sharp disagreements with Syria over its armed intervention in Lebanon's civil war, the Soviets and the Arabs did not always see eye to eye.

And yet, Moscow never wavered in its support of Syria and Egypt during the 1973 conflagration, particularly after the Israeli Air Force bombed the Soviet cultural centre in Damascus and sunk a Soviet merchant ship in the Syrian port of Tartus.

Following these events, Israelyan discloses, several agitated members of the Politburo called for retaliatory measures against Israel. But Brezhnev, among others, demurred. Instead, Moscow dispatched a strongly-worded message to then U.S. president Richard Nixon protesting Israeli "criminal acts," and instructed its United Nations ambassador to lambast Israel.

The envoy, Yakov Malik, went overboard, equating the Israeli bombings to Nazi crimes. Gromyko was not impressed, calling his performance "a cheap show" and ordering Israelyan to advise the Soviet press to play down these stories.

In this connection, Israelyan notes that the public protests orchestrated by the Kremlin against Israel during the Yom Kippur War were not as "spectacular" or as "stunning" as similar campaigns in the past. "The attitude toward Israel had changed slightly. Israel did not become popular, of course, but (Israeli) victories over the Arabs created a certain respect for Israel."

The alert was considered a flagrant challenge to the Soviet Union which required a response. But in the Politburo, opinions differed as to what course of action would be appropriate. Hawks like the defence minister wanted to send troops to bolster the presence of Soviet advisors on the Golan. The idea was rejected out of hand, the leadership fearing that it would trigger a nuclear confrontation with the United States. Gromyko, speaking for the majority, reined in the hotheads. "Remember our principal policy," Israelyan quotes him as having said. "We want peace restored in the Middle East and detente preserved."

Peace restored

Israelyan adds that while it opposed the use of force to settle the war, the Soviet Union was not above issuing dire threats. When Israel surrounded Egypt's Third Army, Moscow threatened unilateral action against Israel unless it lifted its siege. Moscow's goal, he observes, was "to dramatize the situation" in order to end the conflict speedily and to save Egypt from "a humiliating surrender."

Nevertheless, the outcome of the war was hardly a triumph for Soviet diplomacy.

In its aftermath, Egypt forged a rapprochement with the United States at the expense of the Soviet Union, while Syria sulked, accusing Moscow of not having worked for an early ceasefire which might have preserved its initial military gains.

Furthermore, as Israelyan correctly points out, the Middle East peace process shifted from Moscow to Washington.

In closing, Israelyan writes that the Cold War delayed the Mideast peace process for decades. This is absolutely true. But I disagree with his conclusion that the Yom Kippur War did not open up great opportunities for establishing "a genuine peace in the Middle East."

Lest we forget, the Yom Kippur War — which essentially ended in a stalemate — sowed the seeds of an historic accommodation between Israel and Egypt. Within four years of the truce, Sadat visited Jerusalem, breaking the Arab boycott of Israel. And in 1979, Israel and Egypt, surmounting the greatest of procedural and substantive difficulties, signed a peace treaty. It did not persuade other Arab states to make peace with Israel, but it did usher in a new era fraught with possibilities.

Hilberg and Hollywood . . .

Worth reading . . .

Raul Hilberg is one of the greatest scholars of the Holocaust. His latest work, Perpetrators, Victims and Bystanders (HarperCollins, $17.50), stands as a tribute to his enviable skills as a historian.

The film industry in Hollywood, founded and consolidated by European-born Jews, generates billions of dollars of wealth for the U.S. economy annually.

But Hollywood is not just an enormous cash cow. More often than not, its films are a barometer of American society and a source of endless fascination to millions of moviegoers. From this perspective, Chronicle of the Cinema: 100 Years of the Movies (General, $79.95) is an excellent reference book, ideal for almost any library. Lavishly illustrated and authoritatively written by a committee of experts, Chronicle of the Cinema is hard to put down.

Defining continuity

By RABBI MORTON GREEN

There are two major themes that flow from the Torah through the millenia of Jewish history into our daily lives — the story of creation and the exodus from Egypt.

These two historic events are dynamic themes being constantly renewed and revitalized.

The perennial significance of Genesis is creation. According to our sacred tradition, creation is a continuous recurrence. HaShem willed the world and it came into being. He wills it and it is sustained. Our tradition has taught us that we must learn to emulate HaShem. If we will it, we can also be a borei — a creator. This attribute of will — creation, is part of our zelem Elokim, the image of G-d with which we were endowed.

When this vital "will" increases in the individual and/or group, extraordinary feats can be achieved.

Moshe's reluctance to take on the divine mission of geula (redemption from Egypt) arose from his lack of confidence that he could create a national "will" for independence and freedom. Ezra in his day sparked and led the return from Babylonian captivity. He achieved religious independence and fashioned and formed the religious character of Am Yisrael.

Rabbi Yochanan ben Zakai radically changed the national character of Am Yisrael to one that continued for over 19 centuries. Living under the sword of the Roman Empire and witnessing the destruction of the Beit Hamikdash, Rabbi Yochanan abandoned the Jerusalem in the Judean Hills and reconstructed the spiritual Jerusalem and the Beit Hamikdash in our siddur, our order of daily prayers.

Herzl, after almost 2,000 years, galvanized the national "will" of Am Yisrael. His unforgettable slogan Im tirzu ain zu agadah, "If you will it, it is no dream" was prophetic. After almost half a century and an ocean of blood and rivers of tears, the prophetic dream became reality.

We are being challenged with a catastrophe that can diminish our numbers even more than the unspeakable Holocaust.

A bland, vacuous slogan "continuity" has arisen. A catch word that can mean anything to anyone.

Norbert Wiener once suggested that the world may be viewed as a myriad of "to whom it may concern" messages. To traditionalists, continuity means a greater commitment to Torah and mitzvot. To secularists, commitment is determined to a great extent by the mind-set of the times. Ruth R. Wisse pointed out that when a business goes into bankruptcy, you do not advise continuity.

Gertrude Himmelfarb describes some of the mind-set values of our times in her book The Demoralization of Society: From Victorian Virtues to Modern Values, such as acceptance of common-law cohabitation, having children outside marriage, acceptance of intermarriages and homosexuality as a legitimate optional lifestyle. She views modern values as the cause of the disintegration of the family.

"For the Victorians," she writes, "these virtues were fixed and certain. The standards were firm even if individuals did not measure up to them. And when conduct fell short of these standards, it was judged in moral terms as bad, wrong or evil — not, as is more often the case today, as misguided, undesirable or inappropriate."

We have exchanged virtues for values. Values bring with them "the assumption that all moral ideals are subjective! As we now understand the word, values do not have to be virtues; they can be beliefs, opinions, attitudes, feelings, habits, conventions, prejudices, even idiosyncrasies — whatever any individual, group or society happens to value, at any time, for any reason."

The exodus from Egypt reached its objective at the foot of Mount Sinai. The declaration of the children of Israel Naaseh v'nishma proclaimed their unconditional acceptance of Torah and mitzvot. If history teaches us anything, it teaches us that continuity is dependent upon the commitment to the Sinaitic Covenant. The leadership of the Jewish community must find the courage to define continuity if it is to be meaningful and productive.

Shaping Israel's destiny

By RACHEL TURKIENICZ

This month, the Torah introduces us to Rebecca. She is unique among the matriarchs in that she alone agrees to leave her homeland and enter a family sight unseen. She marries Isaac and thus combines her life with that of this very complex man. Within Rebecca there is tremendous strength, independence and gentleness, but there is also a hidden component which fills the rift within Isaac.

As Abraham nears the end of his life, he commissions his manservant Eliezer to find a wife for his son Isaac. Abraham's one condition is that she be a woman from his original clan and that she be brought to Isaac — his son must never return to Abraham's birthplace.

This criterion echoes the journey of Abraham's life. God instructs him to leave his ancestral home to travel to an unknown land. Abraham understands that this is a one-way journey. He must never return to the place of his origin either physically or spiritually. Thus his final demand for his son is defined by his allegiance to God.

Eliezer embarks on this mission and turns to God with his own request. He asks God to identify the woman who embodies empathy and caring, thus choosing the appropriate woman for Isaac.

When Eliezer arrives at the well, Rebecca approaches him and offers him a drink; she then offers water to his camels. This woman's empathy for the traveller and caring for his animals is greater than her fear of a stranger. These qualities are crucial when one considers the man she is destined to wed.

It is Isaac who was led by his father onto a mountain and bound and placed upon an altar ready for sacrifice to God. The Torah portrays Isaac as passive and the experience leaves him scarred. We do not again see direct contact between Isaac and his father, and there is limited contact between Isaac and God. That moment as a child upon the altar defines the life of the man.

The midrash paints Isaac as a willing young man; yet even a willing participant cannot remain untouched. Rebecca must possess the strength to live with such a man, as well as the caring to understand him. Her strength and independence become apparent when she informs her family that she will follow Eliezer and marry a man she has never seen.

When Isaac and Rebecca first meet, they do not exchange formal introductions, they exchange intimacies. Isaac brings Rebecca into his mother's tent and weds her. Isaac understands that she alone can complete him. That which is clear to Isaac is hidden from the reader unless we understand the essence of Rebecca: her name.

The name Rebecca can be connected to the ancient root word rabak, which means to tie or to bind. Within her name Rebecca embodies the powerful experience that defines her husband. She can fully understand, empathize and respond to Isaac. Yet she must also rely on her strength and independence to mold the family and shape the future destiny of Israel.

She finally spoke out against violence

By PHYLLIS FELDMAN

Guest Voices

My friend Miriam (a pseudonym) did what not many religious women dare to do — she spoke out against the domestic violence in her home.

A bright, educated woman and a baal t'shuvah, Miriam was truly a religious person, in both the spiritual and personal sense of the word; quite the contrary to her husband then of nine years who was "religious" by a different set of standards. He attended synagogue regularly and observed the laws of kashrut, and was shomer Shabbas; but he was also aggressive and controlling — and physically abusive to his wife.

A little over a year ago, the problem escalated and reached the breaking point, when David (also a pseudonym) forced Miriam to be unwillingly subjected to a tirade of sexual and physical abuse.

The decision to seek help was extremely difficult for Miriam, because like many other Orthodox women, she felt it was her responsibility to ensure that the household stay intact, and for the sake of the children and the family name, to be quiet and keep the horror to herself. Stunned and hurt she confided in a friend, who eventually convinced her that she must report the incident to the authorities.

Fortunately, once charges are laid by the Crown, they are non-negotiable for dismissal — because controlling and shrewd as ever, David tried to use Miriam's get as leverage, by demanding she drop the charges against him. She was certainly tempted; the get was the thing that mattered most by now, to be free of her awful past and move on with her life.

It is a few weeks into the new year 5757 and she knows she should be happy, but instead Miriam is pensive and somewhat ambivalent as she thinks about the year gone by. Even with a strong network of supportive friends, sympathetic co-workers and agency assistance, it has been a very trying time, filled with coersion, custody hearings, financial worries and physical illness — but a year that would eventually end bittersweet.

In the end, the system did serve justice well. David had his day in court. He was found guilty of rape and is now awaiting sentencing.

There are still a few who will stay zai shtill, but Miriam will tell you it just wasn't worth remaining silent.

Jewish lists let your share interests

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

Before the holidays, we began our look at Internet mailing lists. As I mentioned, lists are one of the best ways to use the Jewish Highway in order to share, debate and discuss your interests with people around the world. (And as you'll see later, you don't even need full Internet access to take advantage of them.) But in order to the get the most out of lists, you do need to know some basic commands which will allow you to subscribe, unsubscribe and do other functions such as check the names of everyone else who is a member of the list. For those commands, check out Virtual Jerusalem's Crash Course on Lists [http://www.virtual.co.il/city_services/lists/what.htm].

I have come across several hundred mailing lists relating to Jewish and Israeli topics with the numbers growing all the time. You can have access to most of them from three or four central sites. Here are some of the best:

With over 200 topics, Shamash [gopher://israel.nysernet.org/00/about/SHAMASH-LISTS] is one of the largest Jewish list providers. There are lists on Jewish amateur radio, eco-Zionism, Jewish genealogy, Jewish free loan agencies and Jewish parenting. In order to make subscribing easier, Shamash has created a form which you can find at [http://shamash.org/listform.html]. (By the way, if you are new to a list and you want to catch up the discussion so far, Shamash archives most of its past correspondence at [gopher://shamash.nysernet.org/hh/lists/].)

Virtual Jerusalem [http://www.virtual.co.il/city_services/lists/cat.htm] operates over 150 lists which give you access to discussions about Jews in sport, intermarriage, Jewish humor, missionaries and forums for members of Betar, Bnei Akiva and other youth groups. The quick subscription form is located at [http://www.virtual.co.il/city_services/lists/].

Jewishnet [http://www.jewishnet.net/lis.html] does not operate its own lists. Rather it has assembled a convenient listing of over 230 Jewish lists from all over the Internet. You will find some duplication between its contents and the other Jewish lists.

The Project Genesis Global Learning Network [http://www.torah.org/learning/index.html] publishes daily and weekly essays on topics related to Jewish laws and learning, from Jewish ethics to a discussion on the Torah portion of the week. An excellent site that summarizes where to find other Torah-related lists is found at [http://shamash.org/reform/uahc/congs/dc/dc001/torahnet.html]

And finally, the Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs [http://www.israel-mfa.gov.il/subscrib.html] offers two interesting lists. Israline is a daily summary of the Israeli press prepared by the Israeli Consulate in New York. Isra mid gives you policy papers, press surveys, opinion pieces and editorials.

One of the other best things about lists is that you don't need full World Wide Web access to enjoy all its benefits. All you need is an e-mail account. Instead of looking at a website for the Jewish lists that interest you, you can e-mail a message and you will be sent a complete listing via return e-mail. For example, if you want to receive a listing of the current lists at Virtual Jerusalem, send an e-mail to [listproc@virtual.co.il]. Leave the SUBJECT line blank and send it off with the message containing only the word LISTS. For the Shamash lists, send an e-mail to [listproc@shamash.org] with the message: LISTS. And for the Project Genesis Global Learning Network send an e-mail to [listproc@torah.org] with the message: LISTS. Finally, if you want to be e-mailed a document with all the major list commands, send an e-mail to [listproc@shamash.org] with the message HELP. Unfortunately, this document can be quite technical.

There are many other lists out there on Jewish and Israeli topics being created all the time. And if what you want just isn't out there, then maybe it's time to start your own! [http://www.virtual.co.il/city_services/lists/policy.htm]

So subscribe, have fun and meet people. One minor caution: it can very tempting to sign up for many lists. But if your e-mailbox starts to overflow with messages, you may want to cut down your selections.

On the other hand, who could resist subscribing to Shamash's TREK-COCHAVIM: Star Trek from a Jewish cultural religious perspective? [trek-cochavim@shamash.org]

Food City becomes IGA

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The familiar red and white Food City signs so much a part of Southern Ontario's landscape are being replaced this month with signs saying IGA.

Oshawa Foods spokesperson Tim Carter explained that Food City stores are being moved to the IGA merchandising program. All the stores will be sporting the new signs by the end of October.

The change will have no affect on the extensive kosher department at Food City's Thornhill branch at Clark and Hilda, where the name change took effect formally last week. "There is no risk to that," Carter said, adding that the kosher services are "an important part of the Clark and Hilda store's ability to address the needs of the Jewish community."

Mindful of that market too, Carter said, the Our Compliments line of foods, which is being expanded, will have more kosher products available.

While initially the only changes will be the name and the grocery bags, "the merchandising approach of IGA will be noticable," Carter said.

"Instead of specials and promotions, we will be moving to the EDLP philosophy — Every Day Low Prices."

Promotions are expensive, he said, citing the artificially lowered prices and the labor costs involved in running the specials. The lower operating costs that come from the new policy "will be reflected in lower everyday prices."

They will also be able to have more people in what Carter called the "perishable departments," meat, produce, the deli and the bakery, to "maintain quality, give more service and help the customers."

Jewish literary journal gets new editor

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — "For upcoming young writers, it's getting very hard to get published, especially if you're writing on Jewish subjects," laments Adam Fuerstenberg, the new editor of Parchment, Canada's only Jewish literary journal.

The professor of literature at Ryerson, who has taken over the helm of the 5-year-old literary annual from founding editor Shel Krakofsky, hopes to expand it into a twice-a-year journal that might eventually reward each of its writers and poets with a humble honorarium.

Featuring some 22 stories and poems, the fifth edition of Parchment is set for release during the Toronto Jewish Book Fair. Plans call for the rehearsal space of the Leah Posluns Theatre in North York to be turned into a literary-style cafe called Cafe Kasrilevke, named after Shalom Aleichem's fictitious town.

Morley Torgov, Jack Kuper, Lila Julius, Donia Clenman and Garry Geddes are among the Parchment authors scheduled to give readings on Nov. 10, starting at 3:30 p.m.

According to Fuerstenberg, the state of Canadian Jewish letters is basically healthy, even if relatively few names are emerging to rival the likes of established writers like Mordecai Richler, Irving Layton, Miriam Waddington and Matt Cohen. ("There are exceptions, like Ann Michaels," he offers, referring to the author of the recent acclaimed novel Fugitive Pieces.)

This year, he says, Parchment had to reject considerably more pieces than it accepted, but added, "Our problem is that we haven't been successful in getting more than a few writers from Montreal to send in submissions."

What makes a story or poem Jewish?

"Most obviously, it's Jewish if the subject matter, the narrative, the contents are Jewish," Fuerstenberg says. "They don't necessarily have to be written by Jews. For our purposes, they should have some Canadian-Jewish reflections, but it's not always possible to get that.

"There can also be a Jewishness in the struggle, in the fight to maintain some aspect of the Jewish value system. Admittedly, sometimes the line here is very, very vague."

Along with Parchment's poetry editor Malka Litovitz and fiction editors Barbara Novak, Harriet Kravitz-Morris and Ruby Newman, Fuerstenberg would like to see essays about Canadian Jewish literature included in future issues, especially if the journal goes to twice a year.

"We need some sense of how the Canadian Jewish experience is expressing itself in terms of literature and poetry," he says. "Young and would-be writers need feedback from readers and a sense of where they might fit in."

In recent months, Parchment has developed a "special relationship" with the Centre for Jewish Studies at York University, which is now the journal's official home. The centre is helping Fuerstenberg with the search for donors, patrons and new subscribers.

A minimum donation of $50 made out to The Centre for Jewish Studies – Parchment brings a tax receipt and complimentary copies. A one-year subscription is $12; two years, $20. Parchment's address is York University, Centre for Jewish Studies, Vanier College Room 260, 4700 Keele St., North York M3J 1P3.

With an annual circulation of less than 500, Parchment is not likely to make the Canadian best-sellers' list. But Parchment's editorial team, including new editorial assistant Sidura Ludwig, are giving their time and energy to their shared dream of a vibrant Jewish literary community in Canada.

"There's a younger generation coming up, and we'd like to give them a place where they can get exposure," says Fuerstenberg, adding that Parchment's editors are seeking relevant submissions of fiction, poetry and a new impressionistic category he calls "images."

Cooking classes offered

TORONTO — The Kashruth Council of Toronto, affiliated with Vaad Harabonim of Toronto, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto and Canadian Jewish Congress, has announced its lineup of fall cooking classes.

Three new classes will be offered and another class will be repeated by popular request.

The cooking classes and demonstrations will be given by Vivian Anhang, a teacher and graduate home economist with many years of experience in presenting food-related programs to all segments of the community.

The classes will once again be held at the Shaarei Tefillah Congregation on Monday and Tuesday evenings at 8 p.m. There is ample parking and convenient public transportation. The fee for each class is $15; $10 for students under 18 years of age.

Entrees — The Main Course (V40), on Oct. 22, will feature a variety of main course dishes, including steamed salmon steaks or fillets with basil,

Creative Meatless Snacks and Lunches (V41), on Oct. 29, will present sandwich variations, thermos macaroni and cheese, nutritional granola bars, vegetables with enticing dips and pita pocket surprise.

On Nov. 4, Gourmet Cooking and Entertaining (V5) will be presented. This pareve course will feature sweet and sour whitefish, superb vegetable soup, stuffed boneless veal roast, pasta salad, potato and rice gourmet salad, chocolate roll and cinnamon rolls.

Gourmet Meats and Treats (V42), on Nov. 12, is a new course on different ways to prepare tried and true recipes. This session will include minimum chicken — chicken soup (chicken soup for those who don't want to be left with boiled chicken), couscous medley, crisp baked potatoes, elegant meat loaf a l'oignon, and strawberry rhubarb crisp.

The classes, open to males and females, are limited in enrolment. Registration is first-come first-served.

To register, send your name, address, postal code, phone number (home and work) and a postdated cheque for the day of the class to: Cynthia Gasner, Information and Public Relations, Kashruth Council of Toronto, 4600 Bathurst St., Suite 240, Willowdale, Ont. M2R 3V2.

If registering for more than one class, please send a separate cheque for each class and for each participant. For more details, call 416-635-9550.

Primrose Club to close doors

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Primrose Club, a fixture of the Toronto Jewish community's social scene for nearly 90 years, will close this December.

A major decline in membership, from a high of over 700 in the mid-1980s to its current 120, made it impossible to continue, past president Michael Wynston told The CJN in a recent interview.

"I believe that the needs of the average Jewish person changed," he mused. "Golf and tennis are a priority now, and the Primrose Club's focus is really as a gentlemen's and ladies' club, with cards and luncheon."

There is a health club in the St. Clair Avenue West building, which offers massages, manicures and pedicures, steam, a "rudimentary" exercise room for men and a steam room for women.

Men come in daily to play cards, and on Sunday mornings, some 30 to 40 men come in for breakfast, maybe a barber and manicurist, and chit-chat, Wynston said.

"We used to have all kinds of parties and functions," Wynston remembered, noting especially the Friday night dinners, where nearly 200 people would pack the dining room "for a traditional Jewish dinner, served in elegant style, with wine for kiddush, challah and food beautifully prepared."

The club began on Beverley Street, but moved to Wilcox Street in 1920, where it remained until 1959. The current facility, at the corner of Russell Hill and St. Clair was an award winning design by prominent architect John Parkin.

Over the years, "it served the Jewish community and the community in general in a variety of functions. We hosted UJA, JNF, hospitals, Rotary and Lions clubs, and Maccabi Canada, Wynston said.

The trouble started in the late 1980s, when developer Ken Rotenberg tried to get permission to build a large condo on the site which would include a new home for the Primrose Club, particularly athletic faciltiies.

Wynston said that "membership escalated, since people wanted to be a party to these new facilities — get in on the ground floor, as it were," and the club was able to pay off its debts.

Unfortunately, "there were too many bureaucratic problems and too much ratepayer opposition; so it wasn't a viable project."

When the plans fell through, membership plummeted and it was felt that the club could not carry on.

Wynston, 60, a chartered accountant who has been in the land development and mortgage syndication business, is one of the younger members.

"I love this place," he said wistfully. "On Tuesday and Thursday nights, we come and play cards and sometimes go out for dinner, and on Sunday mornings we come, have a shvitz and tell lies."

On the board for three years and president for two years, he called it "my home away from home."

There are no plans at the present time for a formal closing function, but the club won't go out completely without a bang, Wynston said.

"On Oct. 30, we are having the 50th reunion of Beta Alpha Kappa high school fraternity here. You would recognize a lot of names of people who are coming — Bob Kaplan, Irving Abella, Lloyd Fogler, Dr. Arnold Noyek — and Michael Wynston."

Organ transplants examined

TORONTO — The first heart transplant astounded the world in 1967, but many of the issues involved in organ transplants have been debated by Torah scholars for more than 2,000 years.

Organ transplants have been considered the domain of modern medicine, but according to Rabbi Chaim Sacknovitz, who has studied the bio-ethical issues of Jewish law for more than 10 years, the ethical pros and cons for such procedures have been examined by rabbinic scholars for hundreds of years.

Rabbi Sacknovitz, director of guidance services at the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT), and Dr. Bernard Goldman, chief of cardiac surgery at Sunnybrook Health Science Centre, will be speaking about "The Myth of Organ Transplants — Taboo or Mitzvah?" at the annual Public Health Forum at Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care Oct. 30.

Jewish beliefs about transplants may not have changed for 2,000 years, but the expertise in medical technology has. For Goldman, there are a number of ethical dilemmas which reach into the operating room. For example, does the medical definition of death contradict Jewish beliefs? How do you choose one patient over another to receive an organ transplant? When is it appropriate to ask a patient to consider an organ transplant?

A discussion will follow the presentation at 7:30 p.m. in the Abe Posluns Auditorium at Baycrest Centre, 3560 Bathurst St. Admission is free.

For more information, call 416-785-2500, ext. 2010. The Public Health Forum is a project of Baycrest's Women's Auxiliary.

Survivors welcome Polish benefactor's grandson

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Waclaw Balawejder stirred uncomfortably in his chair, a puzzled look on his face — as if he didn't quite know what to make of the unusual question.

He'd never considered his grandmother and her parents as anything but ordinary folk; so, when asked if he thought that by hiding a Jewish family from the Nazis they could be considered heroic, he shrugged a bit and quietly considered the question.

"I think they did it because everybody should do it," he said through an interpreter. "People should help other people when they're in trouble."

Joe Riesenbach, his sister Jennie Wasser, their sister and parents were saved from certain death thanks to that help-thy-neighbor attitude. For two years from 1943 to 1945, Balawejder's grandmother, Janina Czarnota, along with her two parents, Joseph and Julia Bar, risked their lives to save the Riesenbach family.

A few weeks ago, Joe and Jennie met Balawejder for the first time and over the next two months, they plan to give him the royal treatment to show their gratitude for what his grandmother did for them.

Riesenbach and Wasser have been in contact with Czarnota for years, sending her parcels of clothing, cash and medicine, and they'd hoped to bring her to Canada for a reunion. But her age and failing health prevented her from accepting and she suggested one of her grandchildren take her place.

Balawejder, 24, was the one selected. After a short visit in Toronto, he accompanied Riesenbach back to his home in Winnipeg, where the Polish visitor will spend most of his stay.

In Wasser's north Toronto home, Riesenbach explained the chain of events that led to to Balawejder's visit.

In 1939, the Nazis entered the village of Markowa, near the Czech border. For four years, life went on as usual, but then things changed dramatically for the Riesenbachs, as three groups of Germans were billeted at their house.

The first group, ordinary soldiers, caused no trouble, but the second group were Gestapo police who "were rough and abusive."

A few weeks later, a group of SS men moved in. "We had to serve them and they were kicking my father, Jacob, for no reason," Riesenbach recalled.

During the late summer of 1943, the Riesenbachs' lives were turned upside down. Polish friends in the local police tipped them off that the Germans would soon be rounding up the village's Jews. "You'd better leave now," Riesenbach recalls them saying. Within a few minutes, the family had departed for the fields surrounding the village.

"We ran and hid in ditches between rows of potatoes," Riesenbach said.

As they hid, their unfortunate neighbors were rounded up and some were summarily shot.

The family stayed in the field for two or three weeks, subsisting on a diet of raw carrots, potatoes and beets, "just to stay alive," Wasser said.

As harvest season approached and the realization dawned that the farmers would soon return to their fields, their mother, Ita, began knocking on doors of local farmers, pleading with them to take them in.

The Bars were the only ones to agree. "The reason was that [Julia] Bar was a very religious person and a true Christian," Riesenbach said.

One night, she came to the field and led the family to their farm. Joseph had constructed a "home" for them that would suffice for the next two years — a shelter with a straw roof where hay and feed were kept, in a sort of attic.

Until the war's end, the family spent all their days in that confined space, speaking in whispers so passers-by could not hear them.

The Bars, who earned a meagre living, provided them with watery soup, potatoes and bread. Janina, who was a teenaged girl at the time, carried the food up to the loft every day and carried down the human waste.

Meanwhile, Joseph, who belonged to the Polish underground, brought them reports on the war's progress.

Time dragged on and during the winter, the family huddled close together with only feather pillows and body heat to keep them warm. Handfuls of lice were their constant companions and "we were crippled after two years. We couldn't walk," Wasser said.

The two years did not pass uneventfully. They narrowly avoided capture after the local priest announced in church that search parties would go house to house to find the Jews who had evaded the roundup.

The Bars hurried home to tell them of the impending disaster and Joseph moved them into a tiny hid-

Rabbi Schild launches book in Germany

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to the CJN

TORONTO – Rabbi Erwin Schild, rabbi emeritus of Adath Israel Synagogue in Toronto and author of World Through My Window, an anthology of sermons published in 1992, arrives in Germany this week to attend the launch of the German-language edition of his book and to initiate a six-week speaking tour in German.

The book was translated by Dr. Paul Gerhard Aring, a leading German Christian theologian who specializes in Jewish history and Christian-Jewish relations.

The lecture tour, which primarily involves churches, was arranged by the Association of Protestant Churches of Cologne, the city where Rabbi Schild was born in 1920 and where most of his 25 speaking engagements are concentrated. The final lecture, however, is set for Zurich, Switzerland, on Nov. 21.

Offering pungent insight and commentary on religious, political and other issues, the three dozen sermons in World Through My Window touch on subjects as diverse as the Holocaust, the decline of the Soviet Empire, the gender of God, and what it means to be a chosen people. Most were written in the 1980s and early 1990s, although at least one dates from 1947, when he first attained the pulpit at Adath Israel.

"This is a book that I addressed primarily to Jews, since most of the contents were first delivered verbally to Jewish audiences," said Rabbi Schild.

"But it has evoked an echo among German Christians, who think it is an excellent sample of what Jews are thinking about at this stage in history."

As a young man, Schild bore witness to the German Kristallnacht in 1938 and was later incarcerated in Dachau concentration camp.

"It seemed like three centuries, but on the calendar it amounted to a little over a month," he said of his time in Dachau. He lost his parents and most of his childhood friends in the Holocaust.

Rabbi Schild did not return to Germany until 1981, after a coalition of German church groups invited him to speak. He has made several subsequent visits, including one in November 1988, when he spoke at an annual Christian rally coinciding with the 50th anniversary of Kristallnacht.

His current lecture circuit includes a high-profile "Sermon to the City," known as the Stadtpredigt in German, in a historic church in Cologne, on the anniversary of Kristallnacht. That engagement holds a certain amount of irony for Rabbi Schild, since the locale is not far from his childhood home.

"Coming back now as an honored guest and seeing my book published in Germany gives me a certain amount of satisfaction," he said. But he also admits to "an ambivalent feeling" about the present book launch and tour.

"If my parents had gone to sleep in 1933 or 1934 and had not been killed in the Holocaust, and if they were to wake up now at my book launching, I suppose they wouldn't have been surprised to see that I had written a book," he commented.

ing place he'd dug out in a cold storage cellar behind a screen of potatoes. The cellar was searched by local peasants, but Bar distracted them with talk about his homebrew liquor and they left, unaware that five Jews were hiding a few feet away.

Finally, in April 1945, they were liberated by Russian troops. When Joseph told them the happy news, "we hugged and celebrated," Riesenbach said.

The next day, barely able to walk, they returned home.

"When we were freed and had to go outside, I felt like a bird flying in the air," Wasser said. "I couldn't walk straight."

The Riesenbachs stayed for two or three months. They'd heard about anti-Jewish pogroms in other Polish communities and got their own taste of post-war life when a man brandishing a gun banged on their door past midnight. The intimidation worked and shortly afterward the family fled. After a lengthy oddyssey during which they narrowly avoided being victims in a pogrom in the town of Rzeschov, they made it to Austria. From there they came to Canada.

Despite the intervening years, they've never forgotten their Polish benefactors and were eager to host Janina or someone from her family.

In the short time he's been in Canada, Balawejder has come to appreciate the hospitality he's been shown.

"They're nice people," he said of his Canadian hosts. "Until now I saw them in pictures, but now I've seen them. I feel like a son to them."

Associated honors Weisfeld for his years of dedication

Louis Weisfeld and his wife Gabi show the picture presented to him on his 90th birthday by Associated Hebrew Schools.

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The management committee of Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto recently paid tribute to Louis Weisfeld on his 90th birthday, for a lifetime of dedication to the school.

A special presentation was made in honor of his 52 years of volunteer service.

"Louis represents the type of leader we all aspire to be. He gave freely of his time and of his money to Associated Hebrew Schools on behalf of the entire community," said Sheldon Goodman, president of Associated.

Randy Spiegel, Associated's coordinator of capital projects and public relations, said Weisfeld had been a key motivator in getting the building campaign for the Thornhill campus started, adding that Weisfeld was one of the single largest donors for that project.

Since joining the board in 1944, Weisfeld has served in almost every capacity. He was chairman of the board for 18 years. Today he chairs the scholarship committee that allocates income from the endowment funds for internships and scholarships for the pursuit of Jewish studies in post secondary education.

When his son, Moshe Yosef (now deceased) began attending the school at the age of four in 1944, Weisfeld became involved.

"I felt that if I sent my son, then I should be giving all the help I could," he said in an interview. "It was really an honor to be a member of the board."

At that time, the Hebrew teachers were all "local talent," he said. "We had the finest teachers on the continent." He also praised the retired Toronto Board of Education teachers who, for the most part, taught the general studies program.

Although the school — now one of the world's largest day schools with 2,500 students at three campuses — has grown dramatically in the last 50 years, some things haven't changed, Weisfeld said. "We were always short of money."

No child refused

However, he pointed out that in the early years, money was needed for operating expenses rather than building campaigns. The board sometimes had to approach parents at the end of the year "for a few more dollars," he said.

No child was ever refused admission to the school because parents couldn't pay the tuition, Weisfeld said. A child was once sent home for financial reasons and "within hours, someone went to that child's home to bring that person back to the school," he recalled.

The school moved to Neptune Drive in 1956. "The campus was built on a shoestring," Weisfeld said. "We sold the rooms" to raise money.

Weisfeld is devoted to Jewish scholarship. In 1992, he spent six weeks studying Talmud at Bar-Ilan University in Ramat Gan.

He said attending graduation ceremonies — he attended every year until 1995 — has always given him "the most joy" of all his activities at Associated.

Reflecting on his 50-plus years on the board, Weisfeld said, "We did the best we could do. We were strictly interested in giving kids a good Jewish education and we're still doing it today."

$25 million and counting!

Chapter two for UJA Federation Campaign '97

UJA Federation is shifting its focus toward new contributors as the 1997 campaign heads into its second phase.

To date, the campaign has raised close to $25 million, from over 20,000 donors to date.

Last year, nearly 9,000 donors supported The Three Year Vision, giving UJA Federation volunteers more time to contact people who have never contributed before.

"We should see some very good results," predicts Gary Grundman, who is co-chairing the new gifts effort with Rosanne Ain. "Our campaigners can now devote their energies to further developing our donor base."

A special emphasis is being placed on reaching people living in York region, with 40% of the Jewish population in the Greater Toronto area. "A lot of Jews living north of Steeles would like to become more connected with the Jewish community," explains Alan Lechem, who has played a large role in planning outreach to the area.

The official phase two kickoff begins with New Gifts telethons, October 20, from 10:00 am - 3:00 pm at the Promenade shopping centre, and all day at the Lipa Green Building. "A telethon at the Promenade can really help create a UJA Federation presence and do a lot for building community spirit," explains Brian Schachter, the event co- chair with Lechem.

A series of parlour meetings throughout the city is also being planned to discuss the UJA Federation role in, among other things, Jewish education and the rescue of Jews in danger around the world.

Rene Birnbaum, who is hosting her own parlour meeting, hopes to create "a greater sense of community awareness through discussion of common interests."

"The meetings are about getting people who are interested in becoming more involved together in an intimate setting," observes Lechem.

If you would like to become more involved in outreach to new contributors, please call Ronit Climan at (416) 631- 5738.

UJA Federation Community Partners

BIG RESPONSIBILITIES...BIG COMMITMENT

Barbara Bank and Peter Waxman, co-chairs of UJA Federation's Business Cabinet, are excited about being at the helm of the organization's largest division. Their reward is seeing so many millions of dollars raised through their hard work and long hours.

Barbara Bank

Waxman, who runs his own independent insurance and financial services business, began his volunteer career at UJA Federation four years ago as a canvasser. Although he was reluctant at first to rise within the UJA Federation ranks, Waxman became co-chair of the Insurance Division where he helped to significantly increase the number of contributors.

"It's my way of giving something back to the community which is where I earn my living," he explains. "I learned about charity from my parents and I followed their example."

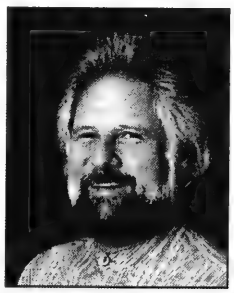
As a father, Waxman sets his own example. His son Mark, who became involved in UJA Federation's Insurance Division a couple of years ago, is now Vice Chair of Financial Services. His youngest son Sam attends Hebrew day school and is a member of Junior UJA.

Barbara Bank has distinguished herself within UJA Federation for 15 years. She's a former Women's Campaign Chair and a recipient of UJA Federation's prestigious Leadership Development Award.

Bank, originally from Boston, has a particular affinity for outreach work because she often felt like an outsider to the Jewish community when she was growing up.

After moving to Toronto, she became involved with UJA Federation and found what she calls "a real connection." "The more I did," recalls Bank, "the more connected I felt until UJA Federation became like my extended family."

As co-chair of the Business Cabinet, Bank is pleased to see "all the strides being made in leadership education and the growing number of young adults within the divisions."



Peter Waxman

Like her co-chair, Bank is determined to hand her children a "legacy they will understand; that in this community they will never feel like outsiders."

"In the end," she says, "I get to give back more than I receive."

UJA WonderFun at Wonderland

Paramount Canada's Wonderland and UJA Federation are inviting the community to the first ever Jewish WonderFun Day on Sunday, October 13.

Although it's the first time Wonderland has dedicated a day to the Jewish community, park officials are certain it won't be the last. "I would like to see this as the beginning of many Jewish Community WonderFun Days," says Wonderland corporate sales representative Margot Somerville.

Tickets for WonderFun Day are $18 per person - half the regular price. They're available by calling UJA Federation's WonderFun Day Hotline at (416) 631-5700 or from Israel's The Judaica Centre, 897 Eglinton Ave. West and 441 Clark Ave., Beit Halochem, 2145 Avenue Rd., Matana Judaica, 248 Steeles Ave. West (Toys R Us plaza) and Negev Book and Gift Store, 3509 Bathurst St.

In addition to the park's 50 rides and more than 160 attractions, the King's Courtyard will be turned into a Kosher Food Fair with sandwiches, hamburgers and hot dogs from Marky's and sweet treats from Kosher Food Warehouse.

From 12:30 to 1:30 pm, the International Showcase Theatre will feature a free concert including performances by acclaimed Canadian recording artist Liberty Silver, Israeli singer Shlomo Haviv and Peter May, accompanied by Mandell Entertainment's Group Dancers. WonderFun participants can also enjoy Jewish music all day long, courtesy of The Radio Show with Phil Kravetsky.

"WonderFun Day is a superb way to bring the community together in a relaxing, family oriented atmosphere," says UJA Federation President Sandra Brown. "Connecting the community is what UJA Federation is all about."

Jewish Book Fair celebrates 20th anniversary

Whether you're a fan of Jewish poetry, the art of yoga, thriller novels or the latest in vegetarian cuisine, The 20th Annual Jewish Book Fair has what you're looking for.

This special anniversary edition of the Book Fair (November 9 - 17) will be opened by celebrated author Bel Kaufman (Up the Down Staircase), who will offer a light hearted account of her grandfather, the revered Yiddish writer Sholem Aleichem.

Authors David Frum (What's Right: The New Conservatism and What It Means to Canada) and Hugh Segal (Hugh Segal: Reflections of a Happy Warrior in the Tory Crusade) will respond to the question "What are two nice Jewish boys doing in the right wing?" and American feminist Anne Roiphe (Fruitful - A Real Mother in the Modern World) will discuss the conflict between family values and the feminist vision.

Other speakers include Hirsh Goodman, Editor-in-Chief of The Jerusalem Report, Linda Frum, with a memoir of her late mother, broadcaster Barbara Frum, thriller writer, Steven Hartov, acclaimed novelist Anne Michaels (Fugitive Pieces), poets Seymour Mayne, Gary Geddes, Sam Simchovitch and Shula Robin.

Technology will be making its debut this year as Jay Brodbar demonstrates Surfing Jewish Cyberspace and Henry Campbell explores Having Fun with Jewish Technology. There are also special programs for children and students, including puppet shows and sing-a-longs.

Bel Kaufman

"The Book Fair is for book lovers," notes event chair, Margie Posluns. "Each year we strive to bring the highest quality speakers and programs to the community."

The Fair is financially supported by UJA Federation and run by close to 150 volunteers. Director Helen Redner says the purpose of the 10 day event is "to sell Jewish books and get them into as many Jewish homes as possible." With an extensively diverse menu of programs, speakers and topics, Redner is certain "the Fair has something for everyone."

All programs take place at the Leah Posluns Theatre, 4588 Bathurst Street. Morning programs and entrance to the Fair are free. Afternoon and evening programs are from $3-$12. For information or tickets, please call 636-1880 ext. 368.

EHUD BARAK MEETS TORONTO

The man considered by many observers to be the leading contender for the leadership of Israel's Labor Party recently undertook a breathless 24 hour visit to Toronto. Ehud Barak, the former Israel Defence Forces Chief of Staff and Foreign Minister, lunched with UJA Federation leadership, spoke with members of Toronto's downtown Jewish community, gave a major address to more than 1,000 people at Holy Blossom Temple and participated in his first cyber-conference...all in one day.

Two of Canada's most important personalities in publishing and film will be sharing the stage in Toronto next week to explain why it's true that there's no business like show business.

Paul Godfrey, Chairman and CEO of Toronto Sun Publishing and Allen Karp, President and CEO of Cineplex Odeon Corporation will be the guest speakers at UJA Federation's The Business of Entertainment, Wednesday, October 16, at the News Theatre, 98 The Esplanade.

Paul Godfrey

Godfrey and Karp will be raising the curtain on how they got their start in the business, and the U.S. influence on Canada's homegrown entertainment industry.

"Entertainment has become big business," notes Earl Rotman, Co-Chair of UJA Federation's Investment Division, "and that's why this program will appeal to so many."

"People are always fascinated with the behind-the-scenes buzz and this program gives them a chance to get the inside scoop," adds Howard Lichtman, Arts and Entertainment Co- Chair.

The event is being jointly sponsored by UJA Federation's Arts and Entertainment Division, Financial Services Division and Young Business Network. Tickets are $15 in advance and $20 at the door. For more information or to order tickets call (416) 635-2883 ext. 177.

Villeneuve exceeded bounds of free speech: CJC

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Lawyers for Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) are convinced there is sufficient evidence for the attorney general of Quebec to proceed with a criminal case against radical separatist Raymond Villeneuve.

In a letter to Paul Begin, CJC Quebec region chair Reisa Teitelbaum, who is a lawyer, and honorary legal counsel Jeffrey Boro, write that Villeneuve "clearly" contravened the laws against incitement of hatred and of violence.

Their submission to Begin cites, Villeneuve's article entitled Jewish Anglophones serving Canadians in his pamphlet La Tempete, as well as his interview with on the French-language radio station CKVL on Yom Kippur with Pierre Pascau, as evidence that he violated section 319 of the Criminal Code.

That section reads: "Every one who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to the breach of the peace is guilty of an indictable offence or an offence punishable on summary conviction."

"Mr. Villeneuve identifies clearly 'Ashkenazi Jews' as being, among others, responsible for the misfortunes of Quebec and encourages in a clear way the use of violent actions against certain individuals that he identifies," Teitelbaum and Boro write.

In the Pascau interview, they note, Villeneuve "refers directly to the use of violence to reach his ends."

Boro admitted some doubt though over whether the case is so clear from a legal point of view. "There are always competing interests; in this case, the right of the Jewish population to protect itself against hateful behavior and, on the other hand, free speech.

"We believe Villeneuve went past the bounds of free speech."

Key to making a hate case stick is whether it can be proven that it was Villeneuve's intention to incite hate or carry out violence. His defence could be that he was expressing an opinion.

Dermod Travis of Forum Quebec, which filed a complaint with the Quebec Human Rights Commission (QHRC) immediately following the release of La Tempete, said his group is now doubtful about a criminal case, after obtaining a legal opinion.

"The [article] was clearly racist, anti-Semitic and threatening. But is it criminal? That's a different issue."

Forum Quebec, a group seeking to promote dialogue between anglophones and francophones but seen as conciliatory to the Parti Quebecois (PQ) government by many, was at time of writing about to have a meeting with the QHRC, which until that point had not made known whether it would pursue the matter.

Although there have been denunciations of Villeneuve by Relations With Citizens Minister Andre Boisclair and PQ MNA David Payne, Premier Lucien Bouchard has ignored CJC's request for an explicit denunciation from him directly.

B'nai Brith (BB) forwent making any formal complaint, believing that present legislation is inadequate.

Instead, it called on the government to amend the provincial Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms to make the incitement of discrimination a civil offence, which was recommended by the QHRC itself two years ago.

Specifically, BB says the charter should prohibit "any act of public incitement to hatred, contempt, ridicule or discrimination against a group or class of persons on the basis of race, religion, color, ethnic or national origin, among others."

Jewish art goes online

MONTREAL — The collection of over 400 antique ceremonial objects housed in the Aron Museum of Temple Emanu-El-Beth Sholom has been plucked, figuratively, from relative obscurity and is about to be diffused to thousands of schools and libraries across Canada via the information highway.

This summer, a group of 10 young people — Jews and non-Jews, anglophones and francophones — worked under a contract with Industry Canada to produce a Web site on the Internet called Art in Context/Decouvertes a travers l'art that contains photographs of some 400 pieces from the collection, most with explanations.

Because the site is intended for the education of high school students in general, the program includes sections on the Jewish holidays and life cycle events to show how the objects are used by Jews, illustrated with photos taken at the temple or homes of members.

There's a glossary of terms related to Judaism and a Jewish calendar through to 1999.

Each section is interconnected, so one can instantly go from the description of Chanukah, for instance, to pictures of the different menorahs in the Aron collection.

The site is also linked to numerous other relevant sites on the Internet via key words that appear in blue.

There is also an audio component, so users can hear, for example, the rattle of the Purim gragger.

At the end is a multiple-choice quiz to test what's been learned. If the right answer is given, the screen goes directly to the page the information was given.

At 464 pages, the site is unusually large, said project coordinator Percy Johnson. The average site is 40 to 50 pages. Despite its size, it's described as extremely accessible.

Rabbi Leigh Lerner noted that it is probably unique for a Canadian synagogue to have such an extensive presence on the Internet.

The site has been fully translated into French.

Art in Context should be online in October as part of Canada's SchoolNet Digital Collections, after being vetted by Industry Canada. The contract, worth up to $30,000, carried the stipulation that it employ young people between 15 to 30 years old for up to 12 weeks, training them in computer skills.

The temple's was one of 80 SchoolNet contracts awarded this year.

I BELIEVE

I BELIEVE in this community because it provides help and hope for more than 23,000 Toronto Jews who live in poverty. That's one out of seven Jews, or 14 per cent of our Jewish population. And the numbers are growing.

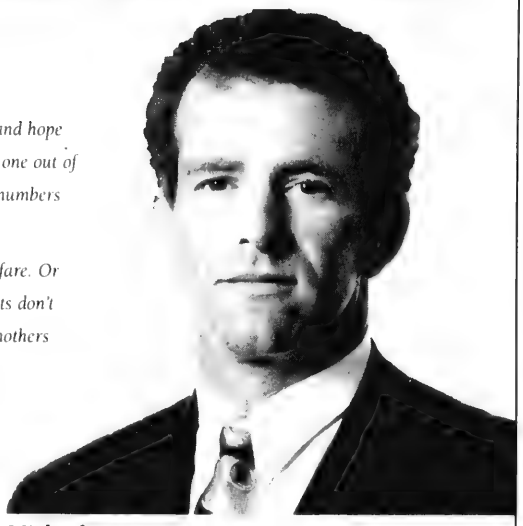
It's hard to believe that members of our community are on welfare. Or that our children frequent food banks. Or that our grandparents don't have a comfortable place in which to live. Or that our single mothers can't give their children warm clothing.

I believe UJA Federation is the most efficient means of dignifying lives and ensuring that what we value — as a Jewish community — is translated into effective action. Now. And always.



Michael Bregman

Through our community institutions, UJA Federation provides for those in need. Funding for the disadvantaged. Support for the disabled. Kosher Meals-on-Wheels. Employment assistance for immigrants. The list goes on.

But for all we have in place, it cannot meet the demand. We need more money, to help more people. Resources can come from only one place: Our community. Each and every one of us.

FOR OUR COMMUNITY. FOR ISRAEL.
FOR OUR CHILDREN. FOREVER.

Solidarity with Israel said to be key to Diaspora's future

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — There is a growing trend for Diaspora Jewish communities to look inward, become more insular and isolated, and regard Israel as just another community where Jews "happen to live," says Julia Koschitzky of Toronto.

Koschitzky, chair of Keren Hayesod's world board of trustees and former chair of United Israel Appeal of Canada, spoke here at the recent Women's Division of Vancouver's Combined Jewish Appeal Top Gifts dinner.

"No matter how strong a local community we strive to create, without Jewish solidarity for Israel there can be no Jewish continuity in the long run. Jewish life cannot be sustained without the State of Israel at its core," she said.

It's ironic, Koschitzky said, that "in the midst of our great achievements, in the midst of ongoing aliyah bringing in 750,000 new immigrants in the last six years, and with less than 50 years of sovereignty, we hear doubts in Diaspora communities about our responsibilities and attachment to our historic homeland."

Because some believe that peace is imminent or that Israel's economy is prospering, "we are beginning to act as though our historical relationship with Israel depended only on its being in a perpetual state of weakness, vulnerability and crisis."

Speaking right after Sukkot, she reminded her audience at the Four Seasons Hotel that while the festival is supposed to be a time for rejoicing, 11 soldiers killed in the recent violence were buried erev Sukkot.

The sukkah, she continued, with its frail walls and leaky roof, symbolizes the historical Jewish condition — "the fragile, vulnerable, endless Diaspora we as people have traversed through the ages. The sukkah speaks to every Jew — it relates to the fragility of our lives."

She said partnership with Israel "transcends" wars, peace and changes in the economy. Even if there were not one Jew left to rescue from a land of distress, and even if Israel's economy were twice what it is, "our combined campaigns would still be at the heart of strengthening the kesher — the bond between Israel and the Diaspora."

Reviewing Israel's rescue of Jews around the world, especially from the former Soviet Union (FSU), she said 1.3 million are still counting on Israel.

"Statistics show that 30,000 are disappearing every year in the FSU because of assimilation or low birth rates. For every child born, eight die. Time is running out, and we are doing our utmost by increasing the number of Hebrew teachers in the FSU, creating ulpanim in 230 cities, running summer and winter camps and arranging direct flights from 20 cities.

"The only heartbreaking fact is that instead of reaching out to 18,000 children, as in the past, now we can only give this kind of experience to 10,000, due to diminution of funds," she said.

Shelley Elnekave, owner of Shelley's Hair Styling in Toronto, is President of the National Academy of Hair Design. He has worked in Paris as director of C.A.T., the French hairdressers' association, was top stylist in his native Israel, and has conducted advanced professional seminars in Canada, the U.S. and Europe. Here in Canada, he has built a reputation as an expert in problem hair.

For Shelley, there is more to hairdressing than mere appearances; hair has lasting beauty only if it is healthy. He finds, however, that many hairdressers use the same harmful methods they did 15 or 20 years ago — with the result that many women suffer harm to their hair, and are afraid to have it permed or highlighted.

This, says Shelley, need not be so. He has discovered how to improve hair while you have it permed or coloured, using nucleic acid and placenta. "Placenta," he explains, "is a rich source of amino acids, which help restore chemically broken bonds in damaged hair."

His discovery is based on P.H. level, or alkaline content, of hair. "Natural hair," he says, "is about P.H.5; perms and colours are about 8-10. The higher the level, the more damage may occur. I reduce it to under P.H.5 — not just keeping hair safe, but improving it, giving it more lustre and resilience than it had before."

Oil, protein and henna treatments do nothing for hair, Shelley asserts. Hair does not absorb oils; we can produce only one of roughly half million types of protein in the human body; and henna is safe only because it coats the hair without penetrating it. "The trick is to enjoy the most beautiful array of colours available to us today, while eliminating alkaline deposits."

Shelley offers a few pointers on common hair problems. Some loss, he says, is natural due to shedding; and hair lost due to illness will grow back. At the same time, everyone's hair has a natural length, so don't worry, for example, if it won't grow past your shoulders. Wash it as often as you like, he advises: clean hair is healthy. As to shampoo, it's merely a cleanser, so the fragrance doesn't matter as long as it is acid balanced.

Mr. Disc Jockey: Seamless Entertainment

Forget the guy with the rumpled jacket and a box of tapes. Forget the wisecracking MC with the old jokes. You and your guests deserve the best possible treatment from the people organizing the entertainment at your wedding or other special event; and Mr. Disc Jockey is there to make sure you get only the best.

Mr. Disc Jockey is more than someone to play music and introduce the band. It is an entertainment co-ordinating service, involving everything from music to floor plan. In some ways, owner Ed McMurtry says, entertainment co-ordinating is like catering. Good food — or in this case, good music — is necessary; but it's not enough. For the guests to enjoy themselves, the presentation must show style, grace and creativity.

This is especially the case when you celebrate a milestone event. A wedding, says McMurtry, is an important step in life to be treated with respect, elegance, and dignity. McMurtry and his team wear tuxedos and black ties; and they work in front of their equipment, not behind it. Mr. Disc Jockey is on display, as much as any of the entertainers are, and ready to be judged by appearances.

Mr. Disc Jockey's equipment is high-quality and state-of-the-art, and needs minimal attention. Time is saved by using CD's rather than tapes. In this way a requested song can be found in seconds. This flexibility ensures that all of your entertainment runs smoothly and on schedule.

Ambient sound level is an important part of the atmosphere at a special event. Mr. Disc Jockey's sound is big, pervades the room without being loud, and can be fed into a house sound system at low volume for an ambient cocktail/dinner background effect.

McMurtry devotes the same attention to lighting, staging and decor, as he does to music and sound. He makes great use of perimeter lighting, which often tends to create a friendlier ambience than overhead lights; and he has the equipment for special effects like pin-spotting tables.

The Mr. Disc Jockey team's attention to detail makes things easy for the client and party organizer. Two weeks before the wedding, every detail about the wedding is confirmed with the bride and groom, via Mr. Disc Jockey's wedding confirmation form; how they will enter the room; whether they will dance the first dance by themselves; if both their natural parents are attending etc. etc. During the evening, McMurtry and his team personally introduce themselves to the guests to get song requests; or, if the bride and groom prefer, they simply put request cards on the table for guests to fill out.

Seamless entertainment is a concept everyone at Mr. Disc Jockey firmly believes in. They work closely with bands and other entertainers when booked together, not to repeat the same material or have any "dead air" when changing over on stage which makes for a seamless transition.

The Mr. Disc Jockey team also enjoys interactive work with the guests, who often have more fun if they have some input. One can be interactive "they point out", and still be elegant.

McMurtry has 16 years' experience in entertainment co-ordination; 6 of those years are full-time. Over the years, Mr. Disc Jockey has grown and expanded, and has built a solid reputation for successful bar mitzvahs and weddings.

Mr. Disc Jockey now does shows across Canada and the U.S. This international experience is starting to be a selling point for the company, which is backed by its own professional production team, Edwin Allen Productions.

Edwin Allen Productions and the Mr. Disc Jockey team can handle the most elaborate events and pride themselves on exceeding their client's expectations.

"We do the impossible every day," McMurtry smiles. "Miracles take more advance notice." For bookings call: (905) 737-8670!

At the Regal Constellation, you are the greatest asset

For a hotel, the most valuable asset is a satisfied guest. At the Regal Constellation, you, our guest, are our greatest asset; and we want your wedding or other simcha to be special. Not only do we want you to recommend us to your friends, our job is to satisfy you; and we love our work.

So what's special about the Regal Constellation?

First, our ballrooms can be divided into sections so that we can alter our floor plan to suit your needs. Layout, and the way your guests move around the rooms, contribute to the ambience so this is one of the ways we help you make your simcha unique. Besides two main ballrooms, we have smaller rooms for intimate occasions (total banquet space of 100,000 sq. ft. including our Boardrooms).

Second, we offer many possible locations for your chuppah: under either of our two skylights, both of which open; or, if you like, in a separate ballroom. Also, all the rooms (separate reception halls, dining/dancing hall, change rooms, Yichud room) are conveniently situated under one roof on the ground floor.

Third, Regal Constellation has a permanent Kosher kitchen under strict supervision of the Kashruth Council, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto (C.O.R.). Did you know that we've been catering Kosher functions for 18 years?

We can tailor a menu to suit any taste and budget; and we always maintain the high quality you expect from the Regal Constellation Hotel and our brilliant Chef Josef, who has been with us for over 25 years.

The Regal Constellation caters from 40 to 4,000, from private meetings to huge conventions; weddings with 200 to 1,000 guests, we take in our stride. No event is too small or too large.

Our talented team at Regal Constellation are happy to recommend photographers, videographers, florists, printers, entertainers and other professionals who have served our previous guests well.

If you book your wedding with us, we give you, for one night at no charge, a Bridal Suite, Yichud room (guest room on the main floor), and a Premium Guest room for each set of parents of the bride and groom. We also offer special room rates for any of your guests who stay over with us.

The Regal Constellation has parking for over 2,000 cars, and airport shuttle service at a nominal charge. We are located at 900 Dixon Road in Etobicoke, near Pearson Airport. For information, please call our Kosher Catering Expert at (416) 798-6400.

EXCITEMENT ON BAYVIEW! Beth Tikvah offers new Kosher catering concept

Toronto is experiencing a new trend in kosher catering with the introduction of an open kitchen concept at Beth Tikvah Synagogue. It's all about choice, quality and value.

Beth Tikvah entered into an arrangement with four high quality, well experienced kosher caterers in the spring of 1996 and the reviews to date have been very enthusiastic. The four caterers are: GMB Culinary Productions in association with Zuchter Berk Creative Caterers; Levy's Catering; Malmar Fine Foods and Catering; and Peter Graben Fine Foods Limited.

"This project was months in preparation," says Beverley Holtzman, Catering Chair. "We gathered a committee whose members personify a diverse cross section of the Synagogue. There was representation from different ages and lifestyles, as well as input from foodservice professionals. Kosher caterers from across the city were invited to apply. Our very active catering committee then selected, based on a list of criteria and tasting presentations, the four fine caterers they felt would best service our clients' needs."

The new format means that families planning an event will have many choices in both style of service and value range among the caterers.

This innovative "open kitchen" concept is a first for Torontonians wishing to plan a kosher simcha in a synagogue with glatt kosher kitchen facilities, and we are proud that Beth Tikvah is leading the way. Beth Tikvah is the only Conservative synagogue in Toronto to offer this choice.

"Celebrating an important life cycle event in the synagogue brings to mind all the reminiscences and history of our traditions," explains Rabbi Wayne Allen, Beth Tikvah's spiritual leader.

Bev Holtzman added, "we hope the wide variety of choices available will lead people to consider Beth Tikvah as a viable option when planning in-synagogue functions."

Beth Tikvah Synagogue offers banquet halls capable of seating up to 450 guests, free parking and coat checking. It is easily reached by car or public transit, and is handicapped accessible.

In addition to the main sanctuary, Beth Tikvah's chapel is ideal for the smaller wedding, baby naming, brit milah and aufruf. The synagogue has recently commissioned two chuppahs by prominent Toronto artists Elaine Glassman and Haya Nativ which are available for use by the wedding party at no extra charge.

Beth Tikvah Synagogue and all four caterers are glatt kosher under the supervision of the Rabbinical Vaad Hakashruth of Toronto (COR). Good booking dates are still available for 1997-1998 weddings, bar/bat mitzvahs or any other social function. Organizational and community events are welcome.

Deblins offers helpful hints on shopping and caring for linens

Knowing what to look for and how to care for your bed, bath and table linens will help you enjoy your purchases for many years. Drawing on decades of experience in the linen business, Deblins' president Ellis Chitiz took some time out recently to offer the following helpful hints.

BUYING DUVETS

- What to buy. There are two popular types of duvets: down and synthetic. Each offer advantages, and which one you buy will depend on your needs and budget.

  - Down. If you want the very best, buy down; it retains body heat while allowing the duvet to breathe, keeping you warm in winter and cool in summer. Deblins recommends only white goose down, which offers the most warmth at the least weight. In this respect it far surpasses the cheaper duck down or feathers.

    The duvet outer casing should be 100% cotton, downproof, with the highest possible thread count — preferably over 200. Duvets come in three types of construction: box, channel and Karostep. Deblins recommends box construction, because it keeps the down evenly distributed and eliminates cold spots; a "baffle" wall keeps the down contained within the boxed walls, yet allows it to breathe.

  - Synthetic. If saving a bit more money is your priority — or if you're allergic to down — opt for a good synthetic like the "Thermoloft" duvet, which contains the same light, warm, non-allergenic Dupont fibres used in skiwear. It has the convenience of being machine washable, which will save you money each time you need to clean your duvet.

One general hint: for duvets, it's wise to shop Canadian.

BUYING SHEETS

- What to buy. Look for a percale sheet with a high thread count (minimum 180 threads per square inch; for optimum quality, 200-310 threads per square inch). A high thread count means a tight weave, which makes for a smoother, longer-lasting sheet. Different manufacturers use varying grades of cotton, so learn to read the labels and benefit from the expertise of the sales staff. You'll find the staff at Deblins particularly helpful.

  Although 100% cotton is most comfortable, the majority of sheets are a 50-50 blend of cotton and polyester. The latter offers a combination of comfort, easy care and freedom from wrinkles.

- Caring for sheets. Wash sheets in cold water, and set the dryer on "warm". Never use bleach, and ask your salesperson which detergents he or she recommends; some commercial detergents can cause fading and damage. Percale sheets should not have little fuzz balls or "pills" after washing; these are usually caused by excess heat in the washer and/or dryer.

- Stocking up. If you see a design you like, buy all the matching pieces you think you may eventually want or need — not only the sheets but also the pillowcases, shams, bedskirts, and other accessories. No matter how much you love a particular pattern, it could be discontinued at any time. The bottom line is, if you love it, buy it now.

BUYING TOWELS

- What to buy. Choose 100% cotton. Avoid velour or blended towels: they may feel good at first, but absorb limited moisture. For absorbency, quality American brands like Fieldcrest (including the Royal Velvet, Waverley and Charisma lines, all available at Deblins) are unsurpassed. In addition to towels, Deblins also carries matching bath rugs and accessories in Fieldcrest's full range of fashion-forward colours. Other top lines like Royalton by Bibb are also available.

- Caring for towels. Some of the deeper-toned towels take a few washes to shed surface dye. This is normal, and the towels won't fade. If you're concerned, add a cup of salt to the first wash to hold the dyes firm. Never wash towels with bleach. Do not put fabric softener in the dryer with your towels.

BUYING TABLECLOTHS

- What to buy. Start by jotting down your table measurements. If you don't recall them, use the number of people your table can seat comfortably as a guideline. A table which seats six generally needs a 60" x 84" cloth; a table for eight to ten, 60" x 102".

- For everyday or informal use, a polyester "Visa" cloth is ideal: it needs no ironing, is machine washable, and won't absorb stains. At Deblins you will find Visa cloths in 17 colours and all sizes.

- For special occasions, a traditional look can be achieved with Damask: a cloth with a design woven in that complements fine dinnerware and adds a finishing touch to the decor. Cutwork and Battenburg lace enhance a formal dinner. Even when the table is not in use, an all-lace cloth gives the dining room an air of elegance and refinement.

Deblins offers a myriad of accessories, from napkins and napkin rings to cork place mats in a large variety of scenes and matching coasters.

BRIDAL REGISTRY

If you're a bride-to-be — or shopping for one — Deblins' Bridal Registry takes all of the guesswork, but none of the pleasure, out of the gift-giving process. Amid Deblins' vast range of quality merchandise are every item you'd expect in a "linen" store and many more — like shower curtains, of which Deblins carries hundreds.

Deblins' largest store, the Superstore at 39 Orfus Road, has 10,000 square feet devoted just to linens. Deblins also has stores in The Promenade Mall at Bathurst and Centre Street, and the Mississauga Home and Design Centre at Winston Churchill and Dundas Street. All three stores are open seven days a week.

"Boutique Hotel" offers many wedding benefits

Making sure that a wedding goes well involves hundreds of details. Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto will take care of them all under one roof, meaning less stress on the wedding party, and more enjoyment for everyone — bride, groom, family and friends.

Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto hosts wedding parties of 40 to 150 people, starting at $80.00 per guest, plus gratuity and taxes.

When you book your function at this marvelously mid-sized downtown hotel, which offers free parking for all members of the bridal party, you'll find something special in store for both bride and groom.

The festivities begin at 6 p.m. with a one-hour cocktail reception featuring complimentary piano player, open bar and hot and cold hors d'oeuvres. This is followed by an elegant four-course dinner with imported wine, and sparkling wine afterwards for toasts. There is a four-hour host bar after dinner, and coffee and tea service at midnight.

The bride and groom may enjoy two complimentary nights at an Inter-Continental hotel in New York, Washington D.C., Miami, New Orleans, Los Angeles, or San Francisco. Or, there is the alternative of one free room on the wedding night for every $1,000 spent, to a maximum of five nights. For example, if there are 70 guests at $80 each, totalling $5,600, there would be five complimentary rooms for the bride and groom to offer family and friends. (These figures do not include taxes and gratuity.)

Rates start at $155 for a single or double room, with special rates during the slow season. When they arrive on their wedding night, the bride and groom receive a complimentary suite and chilled champagne. Before setting out next morning on their honeymoon, they are served a continental breakfast (sliced fruit, Danish pastry, croissants and coffee).

If you wish, Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto will be pleased to organize every aspect of your wedding within the domain of the hotel, from flowers to entertainment. The catering manager will attend to every detail to ensure all goes smoothly. This level of service is in keeping with Hotel Inter-Continental's profile: it's a "boutique hotel" for individual business travellers, families, intimates and small groups (and possibly a celebrity or two in search of privacy and quiet).

Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto is located at 220 Bloor Street West, just west of Avenue Road, across from the Royal Conservatory of Music. For more information, ask for the catering manager at (416) 960-5200.

At Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto, we make any simcha elegantly distinctive and respectfully traditional. Celebrate in one of our elegant reception rooms with up to 250 guests, or under the stars in our outdoor courtyard. And enjoy a special Mazel Tov gift – a complimentary overnight stay for every $1,000 you spend on Food & Beverage.

For more information, call (416) 960-5200.

Duette carries all the finest gowns to give brides that extra-special look

Whether you are buying your wedding gown, having it custom-made or customized, Duette is dedicated to making you look perfect on your wedding day.

From headpieces and earrings to gowns and shoes Duette carries all the finest products to make the bride and her bridal party look extra-special.

Anna DiRenzo, designer and buyer for the almost 45 year old family-run business says that from the moment a bride walks into the store, she is put at ease. "We like our clients to shop at leisure without pressure. We want them to look around, talk to us and really know what they want before they make any decisions.".

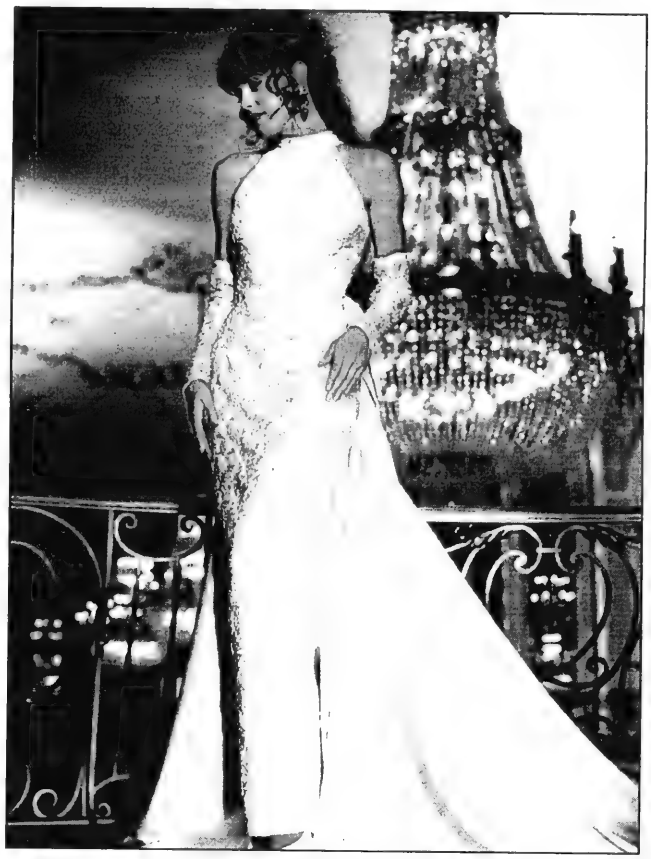
At Duette, brides can have a gown created from scratch, make structural changes to enhance the framework of an original gown or choose from gowns already in the store. Whatever they choose, the expert staff provides clients with maximum care from the moment they arrive until they leave with gown in hand. "I am not happy until my client is satisfied. I know when they fee comfortable with their gown," says DiRenzo.

With over 400 bridal gowns in stock at any one time, she says that more than half of the brides who come in for a custom-made gown find what they want in the store. "We carry designers such as Scaasi, Milady or Amsale and any gown can be customized. Sometimes it is just a matter of making the neck higher, the sleeves longer or the bodice changed. We can reconstruct a size 12 gown to fit a size 6 woman or alter a gown if the bride's figure changes. Every change can be accommodated."

DiRenzo, who attends New York and European trade shows advises brides to shop for their gowns at least 8 or 10 months in advance, if possible. "This gives them time to wait for that perfect lace, the exact trim — whatever they want. I don't feel comfortable when clients do not get exactly what they had their heart set on.

"When shopping for a gown, do not overshop — including Duette choose only 2 or 3 salons because seeing too many gowns can be confusing. Also, pay close attention to service and feel free to ask questions. Your consultant should be knowledgeable and confident in answering your questions and should give you all the time you need. Buying a wedding gown is not a time to be rushed."

She also advises brides to scour bridal magazines and tear out pictures that are most appealing. "Go through these pictures and eliminate your second choices. The remaining photos are a great start when choosing a gown. From there we can make a sketch, change the sleeves, lengthen the skirt — it does not have to look just like the picture, it just gives the bride an idea of where to begin."



What is the fashion statement for today's bride? "Although the look is divided from simple to ornate, bridal fashion today is very much a 1960's or 70's look," says DiRenzo. "We may see an empire line gown topped with a guippure lace bodice or a Jackie Onassis-type sleeveless gown with a gold-trimmed scooped neck. Of course, everything can be made more modest for the wedding ceremony. The sleeveless gown can come with a short jacket and I have made snap-off cap sleeves for an off-the-shoulder gown. Anything can be done to any gown. Long gowns are still important and most are in satin, chiffon, silk and peau de soie. Many silk gowns are in an eggshell colour," she says.

No matter what style is chosen, Duette has a gown to fit every budget without compromising style or quality. "We have a selection of discount bridal gowns that cost no more than $600. Once a year we convert the entire store into a bridal warehouse. Gowns that normally sell for thousands of dollars can be bought for as little as $800," DiRenzo says. The next warehouse sale will take place Oct. 17, 18 & 19.

Bridesmaids gowns are an important part of Duette's business and DiRenzo says that although some brides like to have their attendants in gowns with similar necklines and sleeves most choose a colour scheme and allow the bridesmaids to pick their own gown. "Most of all, bridesmaids want wearable clothing. They want a gown they can wear again and again. I appreciate that when I custom-make or customize their dress. Mothers of the bride and groom can choose from a wide selection of gowns, dresses or suits or a custom design."

Accessories are not forgotten at Duette and DiRenzo always has shoes, customized headpieces, undergarments, gloves and jewellery on hand. "Accessories complement the gown and we want the bride to be able to shop at our store for everything. We even arrange for esthetic services such as make-up and waxing. We appreciate how busy todays' brides are and we want to be there to help."

Clients rave about Stuart Moscoe Photography

"Professional, organized, calm, sensitive, kind. These are the qualities we wanted in a photographer for our daughter's wedding. In selecting Stuart Moscoe, all the qualities we had hoped for materialized into relaxed photo sessions and a huge choice of proofs of the posed and candid shots, resulting in an outstanding album."

— Stan & Sue Freedman

"As a wedding co-ordinator who has worked with Stuart on numerous occasions, I highly recommend his services. He is professional, efficient and most important, he is fun to work with. That is why I chose him as my photographer when I got married."

— Nina Linder & Douglas Hoffer

"A photographer can make or break your wedding day. Stuart made ours. Capturing the sheer joy we all felt, on film forever. The problem we encountered was actually deciding which of the photographs we liked the best. Every shot was a winner."

— Sara Levine Petroff & Steven Petroff

"We have used Stuart Moscoe on many occasions for weddings and family portraits. He was always easy to deal with, and the quality of his work is excellent. We would not hesitate to recommend him when quality work is required."

— Elaine & Jerry Cooper

"Stuart Moscoe was easy to work with and very comforting on our hectic wedding day. The work he produced was highly creative, and the quality was excellent. We were thrilled, and we have referred him to many of our friends."

— Jason & Stacey Cloth

"We get raves for the pictures Stuart did for our son's wedding. Everybody loves them, and they ask who the photographer is."

— Jerry & Karen Papernick

Stuart Moscoe Photography offers complete photographic service, including colour and black & white photography, sepia-toning and hand-colouring of black & white photographs, custom retouching, print finishing and framing, and a full range of albums. Ready-made or personalized packages are available. Call (905) 881-8769 to book an appointment to meet Stuart.

Dear Greg: August 11, 1996

We are writing you to let you know how happy we were having you as our photographer for Marnie and Mark's wedding. We were absolutely thrilled with the engagement pictures Greg, you certainly know how to make people you are working with feel comfortable. You always have a big smile on your face when you are at work no matter what you are feeling. Everyone in our wedding party felt totally at ease and I know how important that was for all of us. Marnie and Mark have told me numerous times how much they enjoyed working with you. Thank you so much for helping us get through the entire day and evening without a glitch. Greg, I have absolutely no reservations in referring you to anyone. In fact, I have gone out of my way to refer you. You should feel extremely proud of your work. I wish you all the best in your future endeavors.

Sincerely, Janice and Morrie Goldsmith

A suit fit for a king

Whether he's making suits for luminaries such as King Constantine of Greece, as he did last year, or a single custom-tailored shirt, Stavros Theodoropoulos of Toronto treats each piece he creates with the same obsessive attention to detail.

Stavros, as he prefers to be called, is a master tailor who has been making hand-sewn suits for celebrities and influential executives for 45 years. The Yorkville shop that bears his name is located at 95 Cumberland St.

Stavros says his clients come from as far away as England and San Francisco because they want the quality craftsmanship he offers: a Stavros suit is hand-sewn and the cloth comes from the finest mills in the world.

The fit distinguishes a finely hand-crafted suit from a factory-made one, he says: "a made-to-measure suit should fit like a glove." To that end, he creates an individual pattern for each garment he makes. The results, from jackets with superbly tapered waists to shirts that fit correctly at every joint, are far more flattering than loose-fitting factory-made garments.

A Stavros suit holds its shape because the outer cloth and lining are stitched onto a canvas foundation at the shoulders and front torso. "Without the canvas the suit bags and sags," he says.

Robert Kennedy, who has worked alongside Stavros for three years, says the detailing of a hand-made suit cannot be replicated by machines: each button-hole of a Stavros suit is hand-sewn and the breast pockets are angled so that the pattern of the material can be matched vertically and horizontally. "We're proud of what we do and it shows up in the finished product," he says.

A Stavros suit, priced from $2100, offers good value: if hand-pressed it will last for many years, provided you don't gain too much weight.

STAVROS MASTER TAILOR & SHIRTMAKER

Because his suits can be altered to accommodate moderate weight fluctuations, Stavros recommends that grooms invest in made-to-measure tuxedos. Not only will they look better on the big day, but their tuxedos can carry them through 20-30 years of black-tie events.

Stavros and Kennedy attend the top trade shows in the world to find the finest quality accessories — ties, socks, sweaters, etc. — for their clients. Stavros also carries an exclusive line of black tie accessories.

Stavros makes suits fit for kings. But such fine craftsmanship is a dying art, he laments. "When the master tailors of my generation retire, these fine suits will no longer be available."

Bronson's pride: a satisfied bride

Bronson's China and Gifts has a reputation for service. Satisfied customers don't just come back; they bring new customers, and recommend Bronson's to friends and relatives. Thousands have turned to Bronson's Bridal Registry for gifts they cherish years after the wedding.

Bronson's spacious Thornhill store opened in 1979. For midtown customers and brides, owner Ilene Bronsteter has now opened a new 3,000 sq. ft. store, in Lawrence Plaza.

Bronson's Bridal Registry, one of Canada's best, can accommodate every budget and taste with its huge selection of quality china, dinnerware, flatware, stemware, kitchen items and giftware. Contemporary and traditional patterns from around the world include Rosenthal, Mikasa, Noritake, Wedgewood, Fitz & Floyd, Villeroy and Boch, Royal Doulton, and beautiful hand-painted Italian designs.

Bronson's friendly, knowledgeable consultants help you pick patterns and co-ordinate tabletops, to make sure your tableware enhances your new lifestyle. The atmosphere is relaxed; you and your guests are welcome to take your time choosing.

Besides the best prices on gifts and china, Bronson's offers special services including gift wrapping, same-day delivery and telephone orders. Stock is constantly updated; and as the inventory and Bridal Registry are computerized, service is prompt, and your list stays up to date.

UNDER SUPERVISION OF THE KASHRUTH COUNCIL OF TORONTO

Canoe palatable, palatial and positively Canadian

At Canoe Bar and Restaurant, 54 floors above Toronto, you will feast your eyes as well as your palate. Whether the occasion is a simple business lunch or an elaborate wedding reception, once you look out through the panoramic window of Canoe's main dining room, the memory is yours forever. The Toronto shoreline, from the Beaches to Palace Pier, unfolds below you in a manner unmatched by any other vantage point. On a clear day, you can almost see across Lake Ontario.

The decor is Contemporary Canadian. Venetian blinds allow you to enjoy the natural light, yet control its intensity; the gleam of the white linens contrasts with the warm, polished tones of Canadian hardwood. The dining rooms offer a stark beauty that sits well on its own; all you may want to add for your event is a floral centrepiece.

Canoe offers a spectrum of dishes, representing Canada from coast to coast: Yukon potatoes, wild rice and northern field greens; rabbit, venison, rock hen or duck. Co-chefs Anthony Walsh and Todd Clarmo vary the menus with the seasons. There are many fish dishes, from crab to Arctic char — and sushi with a Canadian flavor, prepared by sushi chef Timothy Ng. For any special occasion, Canoe offers the kind of environment and fare that will always be remembered amid the lifelong collage of standard banquet hall events.

Canoe's extensive wine list includes private consignments of rare wines, both New World and Old World. There are plenty of ice wines, and a fine list of Canadian vintages, mainly from Ontario.

Canoe's main dining room seats 120; for special events, it can be transformed to seat 160. There is also a private lounge for up to 20, and a private dining room for 40. To accommodate special events like weddings, the rooms are designed for versatility; the private lounge, for example, can become an entertainment area for the kids, while you and your friends enjoy your meal in the dining room. The private lounge and dining room can also be combined for up to 60 seated guests, or 100 for cocktails.

Canoe provides customized meals and vegetarian orders on request, and will custom-print group menus with your guests' names.

Hours are Monday to Friday, 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.; the bar is open from 11:30 a.m. till closing. Except for special events, Canoe is closed on weekends. After 5:30 p.m. and on weekends, there is complimentary parking.

For dinner and lunch reservations, call (416) 364-0054; to book your wedding, call Monica Peschmann at (416) 364-1211.

Cruising: The fastest growing travel trend

Honeymooners, families, singles and seniors all love to cruise. Cruising combines the pampering of a spa with fitness, sightseeing, entertainment and gourmet dining; above all cruising provides good value for your travel dollar.

Debbie and Barry Shecter of Goliger's Travel recognized these facts and capitalized upon them by expanding their travel buisness last year and launching "CruiseAhoy".

They also knew that the cruise experience begins long before boarding the ship and that a traveller's needs are best met working with a cruise professional. Judy Jacobs, an expert on cruise travel, was brought on board for her knowledge, personal experience and professional training in both travel and cruising. An avid cruiser herself, Judy has sailed a variety of cruise lines in the Caribbean, Europe and the Orient and currently sits on a cruise advisory council.

Judy ensures that the utmost care is given to every detail of a cruise vacation. "With the ever-increasing number of ships and itineraries, it is important that the right 'shidach' is made between the client's needs, budget and the choice of cruise ships and itineraries," Judy maintains.

With the unprecedented cruise deals available and the attraction of visiting different ports while unpacking only once, isn't it time you considered a cruise vacation?

AT RITCHÉ, BRIDES' DREAMS HAVE COME TRUE FOR THREE GENERATIONS

For over 40 years, the Ritché family has been assisting three generations of Canadian brides with the selection and design of their wedding attire. From the beginning, Ritché's motto has been: "Where brides' dreams come true".

Jack Ritché received his fashion training in Europe, then came to Canada. Here, in his first store at Bloor and Avenue Rd., he soon established a reputation as a leading couturier designer – and not only in Toronto. He has outfitted local and national celebrities, as well as thousands of brides across Canada.

Jack's daughter Vivian joined the family business in 1981. Soon after, Ritché expanded, adding the Avenue Road location; today, Vivian and her husband Arthur Prussky operate two successful bridal salons. Meanwhile, Jack Ritché still personally attends to customers, and finds a creative outlet in designing dresses for brides and mothers in fine fabrics and laces from around the world.

The imported and Canadian bridal gown collections feature designers such as Alfred Sung, Mori Lee, Paloma Blanca, Alfred Angelo, Jai International, Moonlight, Mon Cherie, and Jessica McClintock. It is the Ritché Originals and custom design service, though, that set Ritché apart from other bridal salons.

Vivian says her father has always followed the principle that "What the bride wants, the bride gets" – even though it means working harder, going that extra step to get it exactly right. Vivian and her husband still follow this principle; and the thank-you cards and notes they receive prove that it works.

In fact, the general public have recently nominated Ritché as "Toronto's Favorite Bridal Salon". This is the third year in a row for Ritché to achieve this Toronto Sun Readers Award.

Customers vary greatly, from those who know what they want the moment they see it, to those who carefully ponder every detail. Serving the customer to the best of one's ability means offering guidance which is based on decades of knowledge and experience, yet tailored to individual tastes and desires.

Ritché' has one of the largest selections of bridal wear available in Toronto. Brides-to-be can choose from any one of the hundreds of styles in the salon, or have one custom-made to their own desires. There is something here for every bride, for every taste and theme, elegantly simple or opulently elaborate, traditional, contemporary or avant-garde.

Ritché takes pride in pleasing even the customer with very particular tastes. "In fact," says Vivian, "the real test of excellence is the customer with the most discriminating tastes." Often, moreover, those who are hardest to please are the most loyal, and therefore the best long-term source of recommendations to new customers.

Ritché's spacious three-level Avenue Rd. store features an entire floor of wedding dresses. Relaxing in private consultation rooms, brides make their selections with the assistance of friendly, knowledgeable consultants. Meanwhile, mothers, bridesmaids, flower girls and wedding guests can browse through a wide selection of gowns, special-occasion dresses, suits, evening wear, party dresses, and accessories including jewelry and shoes.

If you are in search of a bargain, visit Ritché's Factory Clearance Store on Richmond St. West at Spadina Ave. Here you will find a large selection of wedding gowns in a wide range of styles and sizes, marked from 20%-70% off retail prices.

For the major events in your life, choosing and deciding must be allowed plenty of time. As you will want to make repeat visits over several months – not only for the bride's gown, but for the mother's suit, bridesmaids' and flower girls' gowns, and accessories – visit or call Ritché's soon.

Jewish student centre dedicated at McMaster U

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — The Beit Menachem Jewish Student Centre was dedicated here recently, almost a year after it opened its doors as McMaster University's first Jewish student centre.

McMaster University president Dr. Peter George welcomed Beit Menachem, located just outside the campus, and thanked the Jewish community for its "generous gift to our [university] community."

Rabbi Morton Green of Adas Israel Congregation and dean of the Hamilton Hebrew Academy and Yeshiva Beit Yitzchak, observed that increasing numbers of Jewish students are attracted to McMaster, and welcomed Beit Menachem as "a home away from home" that would "permit the Jew to be himself and part of society."

On behalf of the Lubavitch movement, Rabbi Zalman Grossbaum, executive vice-president of Chabad Lubavitch, Southern Ontario, and Rabbi Mordechai Berger, Young Israel director of Chabad and dean of Ottawa's Maimonides School and Yeshiva Birchas Menachem, also extended congratulations.

Hamilton United Jewish Appeal co-chair Dr. Cheryl Klein brought greetings from the federation, and Lisa Isen, vice-president of the McMaster Jewish Student Association, a fourth-year sociology student from Toronto, spoke on behalf of the university's Jewish students.

Rabbi Zalman Itkin, director of Chabad Lubavitch, Hamilton, presented the founders of Beit Menachem — Joseph, Daniel and Jacqueline Snajdman; Herb and Cece Schreiber; Lorne and Brenda Richter; Mark and Anne Mandell; and Stephen and Sharon Lax — with a shofar mounted on wood.

New JNF shaliach arrives in Winnipeg

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG – "My wife Malka says she feels like we are in Little Israel," says Yoseph Adar, Winnipeg's new Jewish National Fund shaliach of the city he will call home for the next three years.

Adar arrived here in late August to succeed Ze'ev Kedem who returned to Israel at the end of June. This is Adar's first JNF posting. For the past 14 years, he has served as director-general of Tel Aviv's Association for Tourism. Before that, he had been director of Public Information Services for the Tel Aviv-Jafo municipality and assistant to Tel Aviv's acting mayor.

Adar was born in Bulgaria in 1935. He and his family came to Palestine in 1944 after the Red Army occupied Bulgaria.

Besides representing the JNF in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, Adar will also be travelling to Alberta every few weeks. Alberta was recently made part of a single Prairie JNF region.

BB, CJC-Q vie for attention in the Matzahgate deal

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region (CJC-Q), came under a barrage of criticism recently for striking a Passover imports deal with the Office de Langue Francaise (OLF).

Opinion

But let's try to settle this thing once and for all, OK? From an objective standpoint, did CJC-Q really deserve all that flack? And wasn't the uproar as much about community turf wars as it was about how "kosher" the deal itself was?

The first thing to realize is that if the "other side" in Matzahgate had been a Liberal government, a similar stink would in all probability not have been raised.

The difference now is that the Quebec political climate has become so poisoned and polarized since the referendum, that it's almost reached the point where any contact with the separatist government is seen as collaborating with the enemy.

The CJC did agree to use its "moral authority" over "interested parties" — a phrase even CJC officials now privately admit could have been better chosen. But the role of CJC-Q, the Vaad Ha'ir and the Communaute Sepharade du Quebec (CSQ) truly does not go beyond informing importers and retailers — before Passover — about the 68-day time limit for Passover products. No more, no less.

Should the Jewish community have actually put its signature to the pact?

In retrospect, maybe not. CJC-Q probably could have avoided the controversy by demanding that the OLF unliterally recognize the Jewish community's rights. It's hard to imagine the OLF not eventually giving in.

On the other hand, the agreement was no big deal and it was not "secret," as B'nai Brith (BB) repeatedly charged.

Maybe Congress could have played a meaner game of poker with the OLF, but signing the pact was no different than what BB did with CJC in 1982, when they agreed on a League for Human Rights document to work with the Commission de Surveillance de la Langue Francaise towards francisizing all kosher imports. And as evidence increasingly suggests, BB was perfectly prepared to sign its own deal with the OLF.

And the deal was certainly not "secret." Its progress was followed in The CJN, with the involvement of the CSQ and Vaad reported last June. Contact between the CJC-Q and OLF was no more "secret" than that between BB and the OLF during the negotiations period.

This brings us back to the turf wars question. When all is said and done, how much of BB's harsh opposition to the pact was in good faith and how much was just an effort to play media catch-up with CJC-Q?

Of course, we will never know. But whatever BB's motive, it was irresponsible to compare CJC-Q's actions with — l'havdil! — that of the Judenrat of wartime Europe. Such comparisons are indeed "odious," just as CJC-Q said.

Whether BB likes it or not, CJC-Q is the organization mandated by the Jewish community to be its "parliament," its representative body. So while BB has every right to express its views and to make its own contacts with the OLF, CJC does have a responsibility to try to find a resolution with the OLF.

CJC-Q probably was right in saying that BB criticized the deal because it had been left "out of the loop." But at the same time, such criticism seems disingenuous coming from an organization that is just as preoccupied with getting its share of the media spotlight.

In other words, CJC-Q and BB have been equally culpable in clamoring for media attention, sometimes to the point where the real issues facing the community have become secondary. And here was a perfect example.

In retrospect, both behaviors were out of keeping with two worthy organizations' community responsibilities.

CJC conference set for Edmonton

EDMONTON — The national small communities committee (NSCC) of Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) will hold a leadership development conference at the Royal West Edmonton Inn Nov. 1 to 3, with the theme Strengthening Our Resources: Are We Up to the Challenge?

The conference is geared specifically to those in small communities who will be able to benefit from the programming, according to NSCC co-chairs Ellen Freedman of Burquest, B.C., and Myra Freeman of Halifax, N.S. Cost of registration is $125, which includes GST, five meals and conference material.

Speakers, presenters and facilitators over the weekend will include CJC president Goldie Hershon, national executive chair Renee Switzer Bellas, Quebec region executive director Jack Jedwab, McGill University assistant professor of Psychiatry Dr. Ilana P. Spector, Mount Saint Vincent University professor Sheva Medjuck and Travel Israel (Winnipeg) director Roberta Malam. Federal Minister of Natural Resources Anne McLellan is scheduled to be a keynote speaker.

For more information, contact Shellie Ettinger at 514-931-7531 (extension 254) or Lesley Jacobson at 403-487-5120. Enquiries can also be sent by e-mail to [shelliee@cjc.ca].

During the same weekend meetings will be held in Edmonton of CJC's national community relations committee and law and social action committee.

Separatist-Jewish animosity spills into Commons

Scene in Ottawa

By RICHARD CLEROUX

OTTAWA — The growing animosity between Quebec Jews and hard-line separatists rebounded with ugliness in the Commons last week.

The Federal Liberals tried to link Bloc Québécois leader Michel Gauthier to racist, anti-Semitic remarks made by separatist Raymond Villeneuve in a radio interview the previous week.

The Bloc Québécois MPs felt obliged to come to their leader's defence quickly and loudly.

It was not a pretty scene, with dark innuendoes and pointed accusations flying back and forth across the floor of the Green Chamber.

The whole thing began a week earlier in Montreal when Villeneuve, a former member of the Front de Libération du Québec, the leader of a new fringe political party, Le mouvement de libération nationale du Québec, made some intemperate remarks against Jews and anglophones.

What is suspicious about Villeneuve is that while his remarks have not won over any converts to separatism, they have put the entire mainstream separatist movement on the defensive and linked it to racism and anti-Semitism in the minds of some Quebecers.

It is not easy to figure out Villeneuve's agenda.

Villeneuve was holding forth recently on a popular CKVL radio talk show in Verdun hosted by the suave, eloquent and erudite Pierre Pascau. (He may not have known that Pascau is a Jew from North Africa and the radio station is owned by a prominent Montreal Jewish family.)

Pascau, pushing Villeneuve to the limit, asked him if bombs could eventually be used against Howard Galganov.

Villeneueve replied that "it could come to bombs, or more simple methods such as Molotov cocktails."

Nice talk eh? Undaunted, Villeneuve followed up with a newsletter on the following Sunday which happened to be the eve of Yom Kippur. (But Villeneuve probably wouldn't know the difference between a Jewish holiday and a Holiday Inn!)

"If there is trouble after Quebec becomes independent, nationalists will remember who was against them," Villeneuve wrote. "The major groups fighting separation like Alliance Quebec and the Equality Party were founded by Jews and it's continuing today."

(Wrong again! Both groups were founded by a wide variety of anglophones. Jews were there, but so were Protestants and Catholics, and for that matter, blue-eyed people, and even bald-headed people. It all depends which group in society you want to single out for your own special hatred.)

In the minds of some people, because Villeneuve is a separatist and Bouchard is also a separatist, then Bouchard is responsible for Villeneuve. (Sound like the logic the PQ used on the Canadian Jewish Congress in the Galganov affair?)

Mount Royal Liberal MP Sheila Finestone told the Commons that "the threatening comments made by convicted criminal Raymond Villeneuve particularly against the Jewish community on the eve of their holiest day, Yom Kippur, was an act of hatred and anti-Semitism that cannot be tolerated."

She said a police investigation was not enough — Villeneuve should be prosecuted under Canada's anti-hate laws.

Ahuntsic Bloc Québécois MP Michel Daviault described Villeneuve as "an extremist whose revolting remarks have been unanimously condemned."

Daviault has become somewhat of the Bloc's point man in the continuing acrimony between Jews and separatists. It was Daviault who was chosen to go on Peter Gzowski's Morningside show on CBC radio recently to defend Gauthier after his disastrous visit to the CJC.

Daviault pointed out to the Commons that Gauthier was the first political leader "to disassociate himself from and condemn these remark by Villeneuve, saying they did not reflect the views of any member of the sovereigntist movement in Quebec."

Daviault said it was "totally inadmissable" for any MP to try to link Gauthier to Villeneuve.

(Why is it always harder to clean the mud off than to throw it on in the first place?)

With friends like Villeneuve, the separatist movement doesn't need federalists.

Hate crimes discussed

VANCOUVER — Six senior officers of Canadian Jewish Congress Pacific region (CJC-P) met here recently with British Columbia Attorney General Ujjal Dosanjh to discuss the province's initiatives on hate crimes.

Dosanjh said an anti-hate and anti-bias team is being set up to investigate the nature and scope of hate crime in B.C., to disseminate information, and to interact with communities concerned with hate activities. The team will include one full-time liaison officer, one Crown counsel, two policy analysts and two police representatives.

Dr. Michael Elterman, chair of CJC-P, told the attorney general that "we look forward to working with members of the team. Its establishment is a major step forward in recognizing and fighting hate in our province."

The CJC officers were told that amendments made by the legislature to the Human Rights Act will take effect early in 1997. This will include action under section 2 of the act, which deals with discriminatory publications.

Watch for our GRAND OPENING details in the CJN Oct. 24...

PARADISE OFFERS CLIENTS THE ULTIMATE IN KOSHER CUISINE

Since Paradise Banquet and Convention Centre opened its Kosher kitchen 5 years ago, it has doubled its business each year — bringing you the ultimate in delicious food, with service and ambience to match.

Award-winning Chef Gregory is an experienced international chef, with a talent for inventing exquisite dishes with unique tastes. Among Chef Gregory's recent creations are: Fusile Primavera, a flavourful 3-colour pasta with a julienne of fresh vegetables in a tomato sauce seasoned with garlic and fresh basil; and Chicken Saté, skewers of barbequed chunks of succulent boneless chicken marinated in a sauce made with fresh garlic, ginger, coriander and lime. Let the expertise of Gregory and staff tantalize your palate; the above are but a few choices. Paradise also offers unsurpassed Israeli, Russian, Moroccan, and Middle Eastern specialties.

Paradise Banquet and Convention Centre is a family business with a 32-year tradition of personal service. All servers are dressed in tuxedos and white gloves. Food is both delicious and abundant and seconds are offered on every course. All packages are at the best competitive prices.

To continue this trend, Paradise is celebrating its first five years with a 5th Anniversary "Value Added Package" for upcoming bar & bat mitzvahs and weddings. This offer is available for a limited time only.

Paradise features five rooms, each with a different atmosphere, to seat as few as 20 or as many as 1500. Canada's award-winning designers "2 By 4" have created the decor, featuring unique wall painting techniques, and items such as hand-carved and blasted backlit 1/2" glass as backdrop for one head table. Each lobby has imported Italian granite; there are lovely interior fountains and custom-made brass tube chandeliers. All in all, it's the ideal setting for your special function, whether personal or corporate.

PARADISE "VALUE ADDED PACKAGE"

Includes our incredible $38 / $48 dinner special

PLUS THE FOLLOWING AT NO EXTRA CHARGE:

Human rights accomplishments said to be under attack

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Progress in human rights is under attack by those who are "frightened" by the way these new rights are changing everything in society, says Justice Rosalie Abella of the Ontario Court of Appeal.

Speaking at the Commonwealth Law Conference held here recently, Abella said human rights are "an assault" on the status quo, and those who are scared by the changes have fought back by claiming that advocates of minority rights favor reverse discrimination and political correctness.

Among successes in human rights in Canada, she said, are bilingualism, multiculturalism and the Charter of Rights, as well as affirmative action in the United States.

Instead of concentrating on individual rights during the past three centuries, "we have shifted focus from civil libertarian remedies for individual harm to a search for human rights remedies for collective harm. We gained more rights in one generation than we had in all the previous centuries."

But, she warned, "we have been lulled into a false sense of complacency and there is growing opposition to the achievements."

Abella, born in a German refugee camp, said the Holocaust triggered a fundamental change in the approach to human rights. "The horrifying spectacle of group destruction shocked much of western society and led to a focus on individual rights being superseded by the defence of beleaguered groups. More rights were achieved in one generation than in all previous centuries," she said.

She noted that women, the disabled, gays and other minorities for the first time have been given a chance to participate fully in society. "Why," she wondered, "do we appear to be abandoning this commitment as the century closes?"

JIAS leader dies at 84

MONTREAL — Joseph (Kagedan) Kage, whose name was synonymous with Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS) for decades, died recently at age 84.

Kage was national executive director and later executive vice-president of JIAS for some 30 years until his retirement in 1982. During that period, he oversaw the immigration and resettlement of thousands of post-war refugees from Europe and thousands more Jews fleeing Arab lands.

He was recognized as an expert in international migration and advised government on immigration policy. Kage served for five years on the Refugee Status Advisory Committee of the federal government.

Kage was an immigrant himself, coming to Canada in 1934 from Minsk, Belorussia. Before joining JIAS, he was a teacher and vice-principal at Jewish People's School and a lecturer for many years at the Montreal Jewish Teachers Seminary. He was also an instructor and field supervisor at the McGill School of Social Work.

Kage held five university degrees, all earned in Canada, including a PhD from the University of Montreal.

Kage was the author of numerous articles on immigration and education and the book With Faith and Thanksgiving. He was a columnist with the Yiddish newspaper Kanader Adler and wrote an entry on Jews in the New Canadian Encyclopedia. He also edited Mir Zeinen Do, a large-print Yiddish reader.

Among his many communal activities, he was president of the Jewish Public Library, a founder and president of the Quebec and Canadian Ethnic Press Federation, chair of the Canadian Jewish Congress Yiddish committee, a founding member of the Corporation of Professional Social Workers of Quebec and served on Canadian Citizenship Federation and the Montreal Citizenship Council.

A staunched Labor Zionist, he remained involved until the last weeks of his life.

Kage is survived by wife Miriam Weiner and sons Ian, Allan, Steven and Tom and their families.

ORNATE TORAH FOUND

On his first visit to Egypt, deputy prime minister and minister of foreign affairs, David Levy, was presented with an ornate and ancient Sefer Torah by Egyptian president Moubarak. The Torah was obtained from a synagogue closed 40 years ago in the city of Alexandria, which once had a rich and vibrant Sephardi Jewish community. Upon their recent visit to Jerusalem, Jacques Benquesus, president of Or Haemet Sephardic School and his son Amram met with Levy and are seen admiring the Torah.

Hamilton rabbi to be honored

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — The Educational Endowment Fund (TEEF), initiated a year ago by Hamilton State of Israel Bonds chair Al Rams, will hold its second annual fundraising event on Oct. 13.

Rabbi Irwin Zeplowitz, spiritual leader of Temple Anshe Sholom, will be honored at a special dinner organized in conjunction with the Hamilton Bonds office and the Jewish Federation of Hamilton-Wentworth.

Proceeds from this year's dinner will go towards education of children with special needs.

Rabbi Zeplowitz, a native of Niagara Falls, N.Y., attended the University of Toronto. Following graduation, he studied at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Jerusalem, Los Angeles and Cincinnati, where he was ordained in 1984.

In 1989, after five years as rabbi of a Chicago area congregation, he joined Hamilton's Temple Anshe Sholom.

Bourassa gave his all for people of Quebec

By RUSSELL COPEMAN

Shortly after my appointment as riding assistant to Robert Bourassa in 1991, I was summoned to the Premier's Office to brief Bourassa on a local matter. I was terribly nervous during the trip to Quebec City and the feeling only intensified while I waited to see the premier and some of his advisors.

IN MEMORIAM

Bourassa's first words were a hearty "Bonjour mon Russ." He enquired how I was getting along in the riding office and we sat down to business. A quick briefing, a few quesions and then he asked, "Well, what do we do?" As I was leaving, Bourassa thanked me for coming to meet with him!

I was immediately enthralled. Often described as a cold, aloof, technocrat, here was a warm, gracious down to earth Robert Bourassa listening attentively to a briefing from a junior staff person. He didn't make me feel insignificant. On the contrary, at that moment he made me feel as though I were the most important person in the room.

Robert Bourassa

Bourassa influenced Quebec and Canadian politics for almost 30 years. First elected to the National Assembly at the age of 33, he became in 1970 the youngest premier in the history of Quebec. Six months after assuming office, he had to deal with the October Crisis and the assasination of one of his ministers. Few other Canadian leaders have had to confront a crisis of this proportion. He was 37.

His first administration was marked by tremendous successes and failures: James Bay, the Victoria Conference and then a victory that crushed the opposition in the general election of 1973. His second term was marked by Bill 22, public sector strikes and an equally crushing election defeat in 1976.

In 1985, only nine years later, Bourassa achieved one of the most stunning political comebacks ever and began another eight tumultuous and controversial years as premier. Meech Lake, more language laws, Charlottetown and the Oka Crisis highlighted his last two terms. Then in 1990, at the age of 63, Bourassa faced a much more personal crisis, which ended last week — six years of personal courage, of hope and finally of serene acceptance.

He was, as a longtime political foe described him, "a most exasperating man." There is no dispute that he was a strong Quebec nationalist in the tradition of Quebec premiers before him. As to whether he was a strong federalist, it depends on who you talk to, and when. On the day after his death, Montreal's La Presse ran a story calling Bourassa "an unwavering federalist." Many English-speaking Quebecers thought he was a closet separatist.

Bourassa never really understood anglo-Quebecers. He knew non-francophones were angry after he had overridden the Charter of Rights and banned English from outdoor commercial signs. He just thought that, faced with the typical Bourassa compromise, the anger would fade. It did not.

Pragmatic people

He particularly thought that Montreal's Jewish community would eventually come around to his point of view. He described us as pragmatic people who understood the importance of harmonious coexistence with the majority community. Although a well-read man, Bourassa also badly misjudged the reaction in our community. We do know how important it is to live side by side with the majority community, but our reaction was dominated by the lesson we have learned throughout our history about the importance of individual rights.

That Bourassa had a quick sense of humor was not generally well known. He had a dry wit and always appreciated a pointed barb, even if it was aimed at himself. During my tenure as his riding assistant I was dubbed the pseudo-member of the National Assembly for Saint-Laurent, a crack at Bourassa's relative absence from his own riding. I once mentioned this to him and added that I had the pseudo-salary to go with the title. He laughed so hard he almost fell off the chair from his usual slouched position.

He was a warm, gracious, amusing, exasperating, brilliant man who gave all he had to the people of Quebec. As the Mourner's Kaddish says: May abundant peace and love descend from heaven upon us and upon all Israel, and say you Amen.

Hamilton UJA borrows idea from Vancouver

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — Always on the look-out for innovative fundraising methods, Hamilton United Jewish Appeal (UJA) leadership has this year adopted Vancouver's "plus giving" program, which was launched last year.

Under the new program, donors can designate 50 percent of their "plus gift" to an agency of their choice.

Dr. Patricia Tolkin Eppel, Hamilton UJA campaign director, hopes it will prove as successful for Hamilton's much smaller community of 5,000 as it did in Vancouver.

Campaign co-chair Cheryl Greenbaum hopes the new approach will result in "greater community involvement," and that it will not only encourage members of the various agencies to take part in canvassing, but lead to "a partnership with our agencies."

One problem, says Eppel, is that increased pledges of $100,000 over the past three campaigns was due mainly to increases in small gifts. In a community the size of Hamilton, she points out, "there simply aren't enough people at the top.

She says Hamilton is working with the communities of London and Windsor and receiving help from UJA and the Council of Jewish Federations to get an endowment officer to serve the three communities.

The depressed economy, cuts in government spending and services and rising costs, have meant growing demands, particularly on Jewish Social Services, which administers the kosher food bank, relief payments, Hebrew Free Loan and looks after the newcomer settlement.

In addition, the federation has expanded various services, Eppel explains, to the Midrashah high school, Holocaust education projects and Israel Experience and March of Living scholarships.

A new advertising campaign for the local Jewish paper and synagogue and other bulletins is aimed at getting first-time agencies involved.

The campaign opened last month with a performance at Adas Israel Synagogue by ShoraShim, a group of young Israeli entertainers, with a program entitled Remembering Our Roots. Interspersed were appeals by Eppel and Greenbaum for the local campaign and brief interviews of federation board members about their own roots, conducted by president George Czutrin, a Hungarian-born son of Holocaust survivors.

No other major campaign events are planned, but there will be a series of meetings of "affinity groups," such as doctors, lawyers and business people, Eppel says.

OLYMPIYEDA COMPETITORS

Two Canadians, Matthew Amsel of Montreal (right), and David Levine of Toronto (left), were among 21 North American students who competed in this year's Olympiyeda, an international science competition in Israel designed to encourage youthful interest in science and technology careers. The two are shown with Prof. Zvi Dori, founder and director of the Israel National Museum of Science, sponsors of the Olympiyeda, which is known as the "Olympics of the Mind." Matthew, a student at the Bialik School, and David, a student at Yeshivat Or Chaim, received an all-expense-paid, 24 day-stay at a science camp in Israel, conducted under the auspices of the Israel National Museum of Science. They participated in a science and technology workshop, met with Israel's leading scientists and visited historic, cultural and religious sites.

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VICTORIA — Peter Gary, a survivor of Bergen-Belsen and other Nazi death camps, voluntarily conducts symposia on the Holocaust for students all over Vancouver Island.

He also composes Holocaust music. A music student in Hungary before being interned for four years by the Nazis, Gary completed his music education at the Sorbonne in Paris, receiving his PhD in musicology in 1949.

Recently, the Victoria Holocaust Remembrance and Education Society presented a concert of all-Gary compositions. Titled An Afternoon in Black and White, the program featured numbers representing the "black" — the worst days in Gary's life — and the "white," which Gary explained "is a salute to beautiful Victoria and Vancouver Island, which is now my home — and to its wonderful people."

The music is disconcerting and disturbing, yet compelling. It has harsh undertones revealing the rage against the Nazis that Gary can't get out of his system. One of the works, One Day, One Day, is from his Twentieth Century Passion, an oratorio he is writing for presentation next summer by the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra.

The selection deals with the day of his liberation by the British, summed up in the climactic cry: "Why didn't you come yesterday, or last week?"

Poet Doug Beardsley, a professor at the University of Victoria, articulated some of Gary's musical feelings in readings of his own poetry based on the Holocaust. The main work in the concert was Trilogy+1, for which Gary set three of Beardsley's poems to music. Beardsley read each of his poems before Gary's music was performed.

Gary, who conducted orchestras in France and Germany before immigrating to the United States, taught composition at the University of California before retiring to Victoria. In 1994, he published Concert for Violin and Orchestra, commissioned by Israeli artist Rivka Golani. He is currently working on an opera based on George Bernard Shaw's Don Juan in Hell.

Proceeds from the concert, held at the Roxy Cinegog, will go to the Victoria Holocaust Remembrance and Education Society.

Arafat's next move is IDF's biggest concern

By STEVE RODAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Hours before he left for Washington on Monday, Benjamin Netanyahu took a step unprecedented for him as prime minister. He summoned leading IDF and intelligence officers to assess what the Palestinians might do next in the wake of the bloody battles they waged in the territories last week.

This time, the officers, who included Chief of Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Shahak, military intelligence chief Maj.-Gen. Moshe Ya'alon and head of IDF Central Command Maj.-Gen. Uzi Dayan, decided not to mince words.

Virtually all of them, with the exception of General Security Services chief Ami Ayalon, had been excluded from the consultations prior to the opening of the Hasmonean Tunnel in Jerusalem's Old City and they wanted to make sure their words reached the top.

Their message to Netanyahu was two-fold. First, they warned, the chance of renewed Palestinian attacks on Israeli military and civilian targets was high. One intelligence officer said fighting between Palestinian and Israeli soldiers might spread from the territories into Lebanon, Jordan or even Egypt.

The second message came from a senior field officer who recalled the pitched battles with the Palestinians in Nablus, how Palestinian officers shot at their Israeli partners in joint patrols, how Palestinian officers gave their guns to militants, and how Hamas activists donned police uniforms.

Many military commanders and intelligence analysts acknowledge that they were taken by surprise by last week's battles, the most feverish in the territories since the 1967 Six Day War. Just three months ago, the research division of IDF intelligence assessed that war was highly unlikely over the next year and probably beyond.

That view has now been reassessed and the biggest question mark in the reassessment is Yasser Arafat.

Privately, some IDF officers say that for at least a year IDF intelligence was getting an increasingly blurry picture of what was taking place in the PA areas.

The result was that Arafat had the advantage of taking Israel by surprise. Israeli intelligence officials say Arafat did not order his soldiers to shoot at the IDF on Sept. 25 in Ramallah. But both Palestinian and Israeli officials agree that he decided that he would rather ride the tide of Palestinian anger than risk confronting it.

Arafat's first step was to halt security and intelligence cooperation with Israel. PA security chiefs did not warn IDF commanders of the 1,500 Palestinians being organized in Bir Zeit to mob the Israeli checkpoint at the Arak junction south of Ramallah.

The cooperation breakdown spread throughout Gaza and the West Bank as senior Palestinian police commanders refused to leave their offices to take charge of their men who joined or even led the attacks against Israeli positions. They included members of the elite Force 17 and the Palestinian General Intelligence Service led by Amin al-Hindi.

IDF commanders are convinced that in the end Arafat ordered that Palestinian attacks cease only after he was threatened with an Israeli invasion.

But the biggest concern on the minds of security officials is Arafat's next move. Virtually nobody in the defence community is optimistic. As a result, the new credo in the IDF and Israeli intelligence is self-reliance.

Intelligence is being beefed up and troops have been reinforced. This time, IDF commanders say, they intend to respond with a massive display of firepower that will quickly crush Palestinian resistance.

chance it deserves," Erekat said. "I know that Palestinians and Israelis will understand that we are able to put the peace process on track, when we start implementing the agreements on the ground.

"We are determined to end violence by eradicating all the causes which led to it...and to try to solve our differences by negotiations," Erekat said.

Shortly after the 2½-hour meeting convened, Israel announced steps to ease the closure. These included allowing 2,000 Palestinians laborers into the Erez industrial zone and loosening the closure around Tulkarm.

The meeting took place on the Israeli side of the Erez checkpoint, which 10 days earlier was the scene of bloody gun battles between IDF troops and Palestinian police.

The Israeli team was briefed by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who instructed its members to tell their Palestinian counterparts that the gun battles which killed over 70 people, including 15 soldiers, created a totally new situation and that the Palestinians had to take this into account.

The negotiators were also instructed to re-tool the agreement to redeploy from Hebron, with demands to set up "demilitarized zones" in the city and IDF emplacements surrounding it, which would be able to give aide to Hebron's Jewish residents in an emergency.

The United States was represented by special Middle East coordinator Dennis Ross, Consul-General in Jerusalem Edward Abingdon and Ambassador Martin Indyk.

Two committees were formed, one to deal with Hebron, which will convene on the Palestinian side of the Erez checkpoint. The media will be barred from covering those talks. A second committee dealing with civilian matters was to convene this week.

Both sides are seeking changes on the ground. The Palestinians want guarantees that Israel will not enter the autonomous West Bank cities and promises of "safe-passage" roads linking them with the Gaza Strip. They also want complete control over the Dahaniya airport near Rafiah, but Israel wants to maintain overall security.

High on the agenda is Hebron. The Palestinians are seeking a date for the IDF withdrawal from Palestinian sections of the city, which according to the Oslo accords should have taken place last March. But the government says the agreement is fundamentally flawed. It wants to renegotiate security arrangements and ensure that Palestinian police are not armed with assault rifles, but only with pistols.

Arafat employing political pressure

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Yasser Arafat looked grim after last week's summit in Washington, convened by the United States to rescue the tottering Mideast peace process from irrelevancy, if not destruction.

Mideast Analysis

Arafat, president of the Palestine Authority (PA) and head of the PLO, went home empty-handed, having failed to wring concessions from Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who held fast to his positions.

But for Arafat, there was some light at the end of the tunnel. He had sought a high-profile meeting to publicize the Palestinians' mounting grievances against the Israeli government, and he got it from President Bill Clinton, following the deadly fighting which convulsed the West Bank and the Gaza Strip two weeks ago.

Furthermore, as a result of the two-day conference, Netanyahu, whom Arafat had accused of playacting at peace and of refusing to implement solemn accords, promised to pump new life into the sputtering peace process.

But in the wake of the bloodshed, which widened the gulf of mistrust between Israel and the Palestinians, one wonders whether the two sides are capable of reaching agreements over such contentious issues as Hebron or Jerusalem.

It's abundantly clear that Arafat used the controversy over the archeological tunnel in eastern Jerusalem as a pretext, blowing it all out of proportion to gain a tactical advantage over Netanyahu. The tunnel is not a threat to the complex of mosques around the Temple Mount, as the Palestinians charge. But Arafat, who claims East Jerusalem as the capital of a future Palestinian state, regards the tunnel as a potent symbol of Israeli encroachments there and of Israeli obduracy in the peace talks.

So Arafat called for protests and a commercial strike, and the Palestinian masses, aided by the PA's police force, responded with a vengeance, perhaps beyond his expectations.

The subsequent clashes, far worse in scope than any during the six-year intifadah, confirmed the worst fears of Israelis in each camp — those who despise the Oslo peace process and those who do not and hold Netanyahu responsible for the current impasse.

For Arafat, the ascendancy to power of a Likud government was a disaster, a harbinger of tension. Netanyahu pledged to honor all existing agreements, but his actions have not necessarily corresponded to his words.

In mid-August, after an eight-month hiatus caused by a series of Islamic fundamentalist suicide bombings in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Ashdod, Israel resumed negotiations with the PA.

By early September, Israel and the PA seemed close to reaching a set of understandings designed to nudge the peace process forward. And in line with PA requests, Israel began to ease the border closure by increasing the number of Palestinian work permits.

To Arafat, these glimmerings of hope were offset by Israel's announcement that settlements would be expanded, by the demolition of a Palestinian day-care centre in East Jerusalem and by further Israeli delays in deploying from Hebron.

On a personal level, Arafat was humiliated by an Israeli order holding up permission for him to fly in his helicopter from the Gaza Strip to the West Bank. Arafat was further insulted by Netanyahu's procrasination in agreeing to a face-to-face meeting with him, a deadlock finally broken through President Ezer Weizman's intervention.

Due to all these factors, Arafat launched a campaign to mobilize domestic and international support against Netanyahu's policies.

He met with Shimon Peres, leader of the Labor party, and he issued appeals to the Arab League, the United Nations and Washington.

Escalating the level of his rhetoric, Arafat claimed that Israel had declared war on the Palestinians; threatened "to return to the intifadah;" and suggested that he would seek redress through international arbitration.

Arafat's strategy, with its implicit threat of manipulated violence to achieve political ends, is not without precedent. Twenty-three years ago this week, Egypt and Syria initiated the Yom Kippur War to break a diplomatic stalemate with respect to the status of the Sinai Peninsula and the Golan Heights.

In launching hostilities, Egypt and Syria had no intention of conquering Israel but of regaining land they had lost in the 1967 Six Day War. Having fallen short of this objective, Egypt and Syria successfully enlisted the help of the United States to exert political pressure on Israel.

Israel and Egypt, and then Israel and Syria, negotiated pacts which eventually led to a total Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai and an Israeli pullout from a portion of the Golan.

Arafat appears to be following in their footsteps, hoping that the recent wave of bloodletting in the territories will embolden the United States to seek a viable agreement on the Palestinian front.

The Week in Israel

Sept. 30

• Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu ruled out the possibility of forming a unity government as a result of the clashes with the Palestinians. Netanyahu made the remark in response to a question from Rabbi Ovadia Yosef, spiritual leader of Shas.

• Reports appeared in the media attributing a story to a Munich-based magazine called Focus, claiming that Ron Arad, the pilot shot down 10 years ago in Lebanon, is still alive.

Oct. 1

• In a meeting in Washington with approximately 40 Jewish officials, Netanyahu chided as "not being helpful" those Jewish leaders who had criticized the Israeli government during the armed clashes with the Palestinians.

Oct. 2

• Foreign Minister David Levy addressed the UN General Assembly emphasizing Israel's "irreversible commitment and determination" to pursue the peace process. He also called upon Syrian President Hafez al-Assad to return to negotiations.

Oct. 3

• A Tel Aviv Court sentenced Yigal Amir, his brother, Hagai and friend Dror Adani to prison terms ranging from five to 12 years for plotting the murder of Yitzhak Rabin. The three had been convicted of conspiracy charges last month.

Oct. 4

• Speaking directly to the Palestinian people, Netanyahu appealed to them not to lose hope for the peace talks. He said the Washington summit, which they called a failure, was a chance for a "fresh start".

JERUSALEM 3000 EVENTS

The Jerusalem Khan and the Jerusalem Theatre announced the opening of The Dissidents, Ben Zakai, a new play by Yehoshua Sobol. The play portrays the leaders, the warriors, the zealots and the moderates of the revolt against the Romans as seen through the eyes of Rabbi Shimon Ben Gamliel and Rabbi Yochanan Ben Zakai.

of the Barat family, piercing holes through three walls but injuring no one.

The Palestinians came within 20 metres of the settlement's fence before soldiers and settlers stopped firing in the air and directed their shots at the attackers, says Itzik Nissim, one of the settlers who took part in the exchange. One settler and several soldiers, including the commander of the southern brigade, were wounded.

The word "ghetto" comes up in nearly every conversation at Kfar Darom. This is ironic because it is the image, way of life and stereotype of the ghetto that the settlers want more than anything else to purge from modern Jewish existence – above all, in Eretz Israel. They are citizens of a sovereign Jewish state, have a sympathetic government and an enormous army presence. But the word ghetto is part of the lexicon, and perhaps part of the reality that Jews at Kfar Darom can't escape.

When Shela Shorshan surveys the fortifications that the army is erecting all around the settlement in order to bolster its defence, she is struck by that image.

"They should be dealing properly with the Arabs," she says angrily, "instead of enclosing us in a ghetto."

When Shaul Har Habayit is asked how he feels in the aftermath of last week's rioting, he also introduces the word ghetto, insisting that he doesn't feel as though he's in one. "I have to carry on with life as usual," says the 26-year-old convert from England.

"If I was going to hide inside my house, I might as well pack up my bags and live in a ghetto. I came here to feel free, to feel at home," says Har Habayit, who chose his name in order to show his identification with Jerusalem's Temple Mount.

Last week marked 50 years since the establishment of the original Kfar Darom, a kibbutz forced to surrender in the War of Independence after an eight-month siege. Residents of the present-day settlement spent a year planning a festive jubilee – to have been held on Sept. 29, but it was cancelled at the last minute.

The reason? Kfar Darom was once again under siege.

For two days residents were not allowed to leave the settlement at all. By the third day, they could do so, but only one person per vehicle; other family members had to travel in an army-escorted bus with protective glass. "The army didn't want entire families in a single car," says one settler, "just in case."

Fifty years later, another siege? Shela Shorshan dismisses the comparison with a laugh. "There is no resemblance between the situation then and now," she says. "It's true we couldn't leave our homes for two days. But in 1948, the members of Kfar Darom were under siege for eight months. Food packages had to be dropped by air. They lost 10 members in battle. When you look at us today, you can't even compare our situation with what it was seven years ago – let alone with 1948."

When Kfar Darom was founded in 1989, in the heat of the intifadah, there were some 20 families – including Shorshan's – living in trailers and relying on saline water.

"When [then Housing Minister] Ariel Sharon proposed building 40 homes here, we thought he was crazy," recalls Shorshan. "What would we do with 40 homes – we only had 20 families. Today they are all full. We haven't even got an empty trailer available for the families that want to join us. We've got running water, electricity, a beautiful Torah institute, a factory, greenhouses – and a new synagogue being built."

Shela Shorshan hates to feel like she's in a state of siege. And when she tours the settlement in daylight and sees the sand and concrete embankments being put up, she can't help but admit that is what is happening. "I'm not prepared to have another fence, another fortification, another wall around me."

Shouldn't she be relieved at the added protection the army is providing?

"No. The more we guard ourselves, the more we show we're afraid We're projecting weakness with all these fortifications. We shouldn't be in a position of defence. They should be." Shorshan rarely invokes the word "Arabs" or "Palestinians."

As for building fortifications, she draws an example from the Bible. "One reason Moses sent spies to the Land of Israel was to see if the people were living freely or in fortresses. Because if you live in a fortress, it shows you are afraid. We build more and more fortifications around us, while they walk around freely.

Shorshan has little patience for people who do not share her brand of idealism.

She believes in the right to settle the entire land of Israel and she has paid dearly for that conviction. Two years after moving to Kfar Darom, her husband Doron was shot to death just a few metres from the settlement. She never considered leaving.

Shorshan was two months pregnant when her husband was murdered. "This is my answer to his death," she says pointing to her five-year-old son, Yair-Doron. "Planting roots.

"When will people stop asking us if we're ready to leave now?" she asks. "Every time there's a tragedy, a bombing, a death, we're asked the same question. Don't you realize we're here to stay? That is the difference between us and Kfar Darom of 1946. We are not going to surrender. And this time, we have a government and an army behind us."

Shorshan says she is not counting on any miracle, just the mysterious processes of history – and the army.

Settlers plan to support PM; protest Hebron pullout

By HERB KEINON
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – A group of settlement activists met in Hebron last week and decided that, for the time being, they would demonstrate in support of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, and against IDF redeployment in Hebron.

Settler representatives were dispatched to the Erez checkpoint, to screen for journalists a video they made prior to the recent violence in which they predicted that Palestinians would open fire on soldiers and civilians.

David Wilder, a spokeperson for the Hebron settlement, said that beyond this, a large demonstration in support of Hebron is planned within the next two weeks.

Meanwhile, Peace Now, which has organized numerous anti-government protests since the violence broke out in the territories two weeks ago, planned a protest against the government's policies opposite the Knesset on Monday, to coincide with the scheduled Knesset debate.

As far as what action they could take to prevent an IDF withdrawal, Wilder said: "An IDF pullout is almost impossible to combat. If the IDF decides to pull out, it will be very difficult to stop them.

"We will cross that bridge when we get to it, but now we are trying to ensure that we don't get to that bridge."

Belzer rebbe says Likud mistakes led to bloodshed

By HAIM SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – The rebbe of Belz, Rabbi Yisachar Dov Rokach, issued a blistering condemnation of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and his government, which he said had made mistakes which led to bloodshed.

The rebbe was speaking last Saturday night in a traditional talk given at the end of Simchat Torah, at which he speaks of the events of the day. During the past three months, he told his followers, the government had shown considerable ineptitude, as a result of its inexperience.

Warning against a tendency toward greater militancy on the part of the haredi public, he said the command to live by the sword was a blessing which had been granted to the descendents of Esau, not to the sons of Israel. He warned of the danger in which Israel found itself as a result of the government's action and the fact that the state had become isolated.

Yisrael Eichler, a spokesperson for the Belz Chassidim, noted that although Rabbi Rokach is a member of the Degel Hatorah Council of Sages, he has always taken an independent line and he is considered one of the most dovish of the haredi spiritual leaders. In the past, Rokach had supported the peace process and the Oslo accords.

Knesset speaker appeals for calm as session opens

By LIAT COLLINS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Knesset Speaker Dan Tichon met with the heads of all factions to ask them to ensure restraint and fair discussion during Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's political address, which opened the Knesset's winter session Monday.

Tichon described the atmosphere as tense and said he expects the strong disagreements of the last two months to be expressed in a stormy session. But he warned that he would not allow MKs to get away with unruly behavior, even if it meant he had to bar an MK from speaking.

Netanyahu was scheduled to address the plenum in the presence of President Ezer Weizman.

If the opposition goes ahead with its threat to turn the address into a no-confidence motion, the vote will be held next week. Tichon told parliamentary reporters he had not yet received a request for the motion.

Parliamentary immunity is likely to be a major issue this Knesset, with more MKs than ever before facing charges, Tichon said. The Knesset will hold special sessions to commemorate 40 years since the Sinai Campaign, the death of Moshe Dayan and the first anniversary of the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin.

The session is also likely to be marked by the annual budget discussions, which start at the end of this month.

Tunnel issue a skirmish in battle over Jerusalem

By GERALD M. STEINBERG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

The small war that followed the opening of the Hasmonean Tunnel along the ancient street in Jerusalem was not surprising, but the lack of preparation on the Israeli side was. The Palestinians were handed an ideal opportunity to inflict a major political defeat on Israel and the Netanyahu government.

Opinion

In Jerusalem, which has always been the most sensitive dimension of the Israel-Palestinian conflict, the issues have nothing to do with tourism or allegations of structural danger to buildings near the Temple Mount.

The violence is the combined result of three factors: frustration over the change of government in Israel, which halted the march toward a Palestinian state; arms and training received by the Palestinian military in preparation for such an opportunity; and the continuing battle for control of the city.

Jerusalem, as always, was the catalyst for the conflict. The Palestinians claim exclusive historical and religious rights in the Old City, while denying the centrality of Jerusalem to the Jewish people. As Yasser Arafat clearly stated, his goal is to halt "the Judaization of Jerusalem," including the uncovering of ancient Jewish historical sites.

In 1948, after the Arab Legion occupied the ancient Jewish Quarter and expelled the surviving residents, the Palestinians and Jordanian military attempted to destroy and bury all evidence of Jewish Jerusalem. When the Jewish Quarter was retaken in 1967, the area around the Western Wall was filled with dung, garbage and animal carcasses. All the synagogues had been destroyed, a road was plowed directly through the Jewish Cemetery on the Mount of Olives, which dates back to the Second Temple, and 38,000 graves had been defaced or destroyed. The city had been divided, with Jews forbidden to enter the area or pray at the Wall.

After 1967, the Israeli government reversed this damage, "re-Judaizing Jerusalem," to paraphrase Arafat, and the process continues. Despite the bitterness, the Israeli government did not respond to the Arabs in kind, but allowed Muslims and Christians to maintain full religious freedom and autonomy. To avoid friction, the government still does not allow Jews to pray on the Temple Mount.

The political battle, however, continues. The false allegations linking Israeli tunneling with damage to Muslim structures go back to 1974, when the Arabs led UNESCO to pass a resolution condemning Israeli excavations on the same Hasmonean Tunnel. UNESCO appointed an expert group headed by Prof. Raymond Lemaire, UNESCO's representative to Jerusalem, to investigate the charges.

Although Lemaire was expected to find Israel guilty, in his report, he said: "The criticisms that have been levelled at the methods used in the excavations are groundless. The excavations [near the Temple Mount] are being carried out by a perfectly well-qualified team of experts."

With the damage already done, the options and their consequences must be considered very carefully. If Netanyahu agrees to close the tunnel, he will be admitting failure in the battle for Jewish Jerusalem, and may be forced to resign or accept a national unity government.

If he keeps the tunnel open, however, Netanyahu must lead a public relations counter attack, focusing on Jewish historical links to Jerusalem and comparing Israel's open policies with the efforts of the Palestinians between 1948 and 1967.

At the same time, he will have to restore the political balance by redeploying from Hebron and accelerating the pace of autonomy. And for the foreseeable future, all sides must consider the full consequences of any change in the status quo in Jerusalem.

Survivors launch suit against Swiss banks

NEW YORK — A $20 billion (US) class action lawsuit was filed here last week on behalf of Holocaust survivors, alleging that Swiss banks are refusing to return victims' money, jewelry and other assets.

The defendants named are Union Bank of Switzerland, Swiss Bank Corp., also known as the Swiss National Bank, and more than 100 unnamed banking institutions and individuals.

Apart from the monetary damages, the suit seeks a full accounting of what became of the accounts and personal property of survivors and their families.

The case was brought by Romanian-born Holocaust survivor Gizella Weisshaus, who lives in Brooklyn. The suit was filed on behalf of all survivors and victims who deposited money and valuables in Swiss banks for safekeeping until after World War II.

Children's opera offers uplifting spiritual message

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Brundibar, the children's opera that was performed 55 times in the Nazi concentration camp of Terezin, tells the simple story of a bullying organ grinder who extorts money from children until his victims unite to give the ogre his comeuppance.

"We win because we stick together," said Czech-born John Freund, now 66, who was shipped to Terezin at the age of 12. "The moral is that together, we can beat any devil."

The driving force behind a production of Brundibar, Freund, a retired government accountant, understands only too well how little life imitated art in this instance.

Almost all of Terezin's inmates, including the Jewish orphans in the original cast of Brundibar and Freund himself, were eventually shipped to Auschwitz, where most perished.

"Brundibar was the one thing that was positive about Terezin," he said. "I loved the music and I knew the boys who were in it – the boy who played the principal part was my roommate. Almost all of the kids were killed in Auschwitz. There were only two or three who survived."

The musical, which was written by Jewish composer Hans Krasa (1899-1944) with a libretto by playwright Adolf Hoffmeister, has been performed often in recent years at Terezin and elsewhere in Germany, Poland and Israel. Still, finding a complete score was a challenge.

"It's not like you can go to any music store and buy it," said Helena Fine, the Toronto-based educator and children's performer who is the producer of this production. Eventually, director Marie Franek was obliged to go to Prague to track down a full score.

Forty-five children were chosen from the 85 who auditioned to be in the production, and rehearsals started last January at the B'nai Brith building in North York. B'nai Brith is a sponsor of the production.

"Right now, we don't want to give the kids too much background," said Fine, explaining that the cast members, who are between the ages of eight and 14, haven't been told the fate of the original Terezin cast.

"After the production, we'll take them to the Holocaust Remembrance Centre. Because we saw a production in Prague and all the kids were very sad, they were dragging their faces on the ground. People who had seen the original said, 'No, it wasn't sad at all! It was our happy time.' "

According to Freund and Fine, cast members' parents appreciate Brundibar's special significance and recognize that their children will end up with more than enhanced performance skills from their involvement.

"We're not portraying Jewish people as victims but as very high-spirited," said Fine. "They were faced with very inhumane and difficult conditions, and what did they do? They became involved in the arts. That's a very good spiritual message."

Brundibar is running Oct.19-20 at 8 p.m. at the Leah Posluns Theatre. Special shows for school children run Oct.14-18 and a matinee on Oct. 20. For tickets call 905-884-2882.

Documentary profiles bombing survivors

TORONTO — All Hell Broke Loose, a documentary which explores the experiences of two young people who survived a Middle East suicide bombing, is airing on CBC Newsworld's The Passionate Eye on Oct.13, 9 p.m.

Every night when 13-year-old Raz goes to bed he is afraid. Roy, 14, says he'll never ride a bus again. A year after a car bomb blew up at a bus stop in a northern Israeli town, the survivors and family members of the victims are still dealing with their physical and emotional pain.

All Hell Broke Loose attempts to explore how fear, caused by traumatic events, can lead to violent feelings of racism and prejudice in some, while in others, it leads to expressions of tolerance. The fast cutting of interviews with the musical form of a canon, enhances the poignantly expressed feelings of Arabs and Jews.

Israel to allow foreign venture capital funds to operate tax-free

Jewish characters are linch-pins in play that examines U.S. politics

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It may be that Angels in America thunders across the face of history like a comet, but for this reviewer its appeal is in its Jewish content, the humorous yet wickedly accurate picture of a gay, Jewish intellectual and his troublesome life.

Louis Ironson (Alex Poch-Goldin) is a word processor clerk whose lover is dying of AIDS and it is his piercing analysis of American politics that is the play's cement.

What brings it into focus is the cynical and loud-mouthed real life character Roy M. Cohn, another Jew, who gloats over his zeal in sending Ethel and Julius Rosenberg to the electric chair as spies and over his anti-Communist crusades as Senator Joe McCarthy's henchman. If there is a true villain in Millenium Approaches, the first part of Angels in America, now running at Canadian Stage, it is this man.

And Tom Wood plays to the hilt the man who in real life denied he was a homosexual, said he was suffering from liver cancer, but who died of AIDS. Playwright Tony Kushner's portrait of Cohn may be the strongest and most effective indictment ever penned of the "fixer" in politics.

Angels in America is strong medicine. Don't go if the f--- word offends you. Kushner, himself a gay, Jewish writer and Pulitzer Prize winner, has legitimate dramatic reasons for zooming in on the AIDS crisis as the year 2000 comes into view.

It should be noted that Angels in America is about American politics, not Canadian politics. But is the meanness and harshness of that process already seeping into our own?

To come back to the Jewish linch-pin character, Ironson — he is far from a lovable person, but he looks and sounds genuine, full of contradictions, such as when he does not object to a black homosexual calling him "Lou the Jew" but gets up tight when named "Sid the Yid" in a British pub.

The dialogue between Ironson and Belize (Casel Miles) on black-Jewish relations is a candid reflection of that reality in the United States, though for dramatic purposes, Kushner seems to have given the upper hand to the black.

While Ironson is genuine on stage, the same cannot be said for director Bob Baker's decision to cast Patricia Hamilton, otherwise a very fine actor, as the male rabbi who gives a seminal eulogy of Aronson's grandmother to start the play. I've known many rabbis, women and men, whether Orthodox, Conservative or Reform, and none have been as pallid and lacking in fire. Kushner's lines are terrific, they provide a rationale for the whole play, but the execution is not.

Similarly Baker is way off the mark in depicting Ethel Rosenberg (again Patricia Hamilton) as a tall, Waspish figure when she appears as a ghost to torment Cohn in his dreams. "History is about to crack open," she tells him. A wonderful line, but hard to swallow from a figure who is not anything in speech and appearance like the pudgy, short and defiant woman who went to the chair.

Via Dolorosa Tunnel

Standing in an underground chamber boasting Roman pillars and cobblestones from Herodian times, the group of about 40 tourists in Jerusalem's Western Wall tunnel, including myself, listened as the guide explained that we had reached the end of the tour and had to retrace our steps back some 450 metres to the entrance. This was three months ago.

As most of the people began heading back through this extraordinary series of subterranean passages, the intrepid journalist noticed the locked chain-link fence ahead.

"Where does that lead?" I asked the guide.

"That's an exit. It goes up to the Via Dolorosa. The last time we tried to open it, the Muslims started to riot. Now we keep it closed."

So back we trod, through the various halls, arches and other constructions of Byzantine and Mameluke origin. Again we passed the Great Stone, a 400-tonne massif big as a house. The ancient Israelites were obviously thinking of permanence when they laid down this stone as part of the foundation for the Temple Mount. The Romans couldn't budge it when they brought the Temple down in 70 CE.

Back, back we walked, retracing our steps through time and space. Again we passed the Great Hall, with its excellent scale model of the Temple, and Wilson's Arch, once part of a royal bridge connecting King Hérod's palace to the Temple. Again we heard the reverberating hallelujahs and lamentations of pious Jews in prayer.

Ascending the stairs, we reached the entrance and exited the glass doors into the bright sunlight as another group readied to make the descent into history. Some 400 visitors pass through here each day, but tourism officials assert the figure could easily surpass 1,000 if the Via Dolorosa exit was used.

The Western Wall tunnels are a tourist attraction of special significance to Jews. For centuries, under Muslim and British rule, they were buried, filled with debris, all but forgotten. Serious excavation began only after the Jews won back the Old City in 1967. Since the tunnels permit us to glimpse the two-thirds' portion of the Western Wall that is below ground level, they are a symbol for us that we must look deep beneath the surface of things in order to appreciate our own history and identity as Jews.

Last month, the Via Dolorosa exit was opened and deadly riots ensued. Hopefully, this tragic turn will not deter even a single visitor from seeing the tunnels which, contrary to some distorted claims, do not undermine the Al-Aksa Mosque or any other structure. A visit to these intricate underground passages, which offer a unique glimmer of Israel's ancient glory, is a profound educational experience, not a political statement. No Jewish tourist should depart Jerusalem without seeing the tunnels, any more than he or she would leave without approaching Judaism's holiest site, the Western Wall.

News From El Al: The Sunday flights that El Al Israel Airlines introduced into its summer schedule have proven so popular that the airline has decided to retain the Sunday option throughout the winter. Canadians may continue to fly El Al to Israel on Sunday, as well as on the regularly scheduled flights on Mondays and Wednesdays.

"The Sunday flight leaves Israel at 1 or 2 a.m. and arrives in Toronto at about 9 a.m.; so you can rest all day Sunday and go to work for Monday," says Moshe Shamai, the airline's new general manager for Canada.

Shamai, who took up his new post on Sept. 15, has been commuting weekly from Toronto to Montreal, administrating the shift of the airline's head office to Toronto, where most of its Canadian customers are situated.

"We will still be part of the Montreal community, but we have to face the fact that our biggest market is in Ontario," he says.

Shamai,46, is a former officer in the Israeli Air Force who studied at the Technion in Haifa, worked as an industrial engineer, and joined El Al in 1978. Since moving to north Toronto, he and his wife and two sons have become involved with the Beth Tikvah Congregation on Bayview Ave.

"Not yet," he says with a nervous smile, when asked whether he has purchased the parkas, boots, scarves, dogsleds and other accoutrements that his family will need for a Canadian winter. "I think everything will be OK. With the warm welcome that we've received from the community, I'm sure that we'll pass the first winter without a problem."

Telephone specialists open the sales cycle

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Nothing chills the heart of a salesperson more than the prospect of making a cold call.

Ronit Szabadi, president of The Telesales Specialists know this, and as a result, a large part of her 6-year-old business revolves around opening the sales cycle.

"What we do is arrange it so our clients can meet people face to face. We do all the legwork — identify the buying cycle of prospects, reactivate dormant accounts, keep in touch with clients, introduce and entice the prospect to the product, or introduce new products to a targeted audience. This allows my clients' salespeople to do what they do best, close the sale."

Szabadi, who works from her fully-automated North York home office with three employees, says she is an "outsource inside sales department. My client does not have to set up an inside sales department; we do the sales campaign for them. I always stress that we are not telemarketers, we are telesales specialists. We are the openers, telemarketers are the closers. We create the potential for our client and it is up to them to follow it up."

Her clients include hotels, conference centres, consulting and software firms, and she is currently working for the new renovated Park Plaza Hotel.

"We are identifying for them the corporate clients who are willing to use the facilities of the now five-star hotel. They do not have the staff or the logistics to do this and they want it done quickly and efficiently, so they turned to us."

It was while working at Delta Hotels after graduating from Ryerson Polytechnic University in hospitality and tourism that Szabadi recognized how powerful a tool the telephone can be.

"There is an art to using the phone and when it is done right, it can save time and money. When I do the initial legwork, there is a lot more control over the sales cycle. I warm up and identify the prospect, and discover what efforts are needed to close the sale. About 60 percent of the work is done before my clients meet their prospects."

Being able to position telecommunications tools into the sales cycle is a strategic, complex process, says Szabadi. "Many companies have the technology but do not know where to place it in the sales cycle. We can come in and train staff how to use the phone. Through training sessions, we can make every staff member sales oriented, convert a greater percentage of inbound inquiries to sales and take control of the calls. As well, we teach them how to generate more qualified leads, determine a good prospect, eliminate poor leads, lower inhibitions when cold calling and enhance sales skills."

Jewish Film Fest News: Toronto journalist Shlomo Schwartzberg, who writes frequently on Jewish film, has been appointed the new programmer of the Toronto Jewish Film Festival.

Schwartzberg joins producer Helen Zukerman and director of development Debra Kwinter as a key staff member of the festival, which is the second largest Jewish film festival in North America. He replaces Debra Plotkin, the festival's founding director, who was accepted into the Producer's Lab program of the Canadian Film Centre, where she has several feature film projects under development.

The festival's fifth season runs May 1 to 8, 1997.

Free Screenings: The Jewish Students Union (JSU) of the University of Toronto has arranged four evenings of Jewish film at Innis Town Hall, 2 Sussex Ave. Admission is free.

The Israeli film Braids, dealing with the Jews of Iraq at a sensitive time in their history, is scheduled for screening Oct. 8 at 5 p.m., to be followed by a keynote address.

The Canadian film The Quarrel is offered on Oct. 10 at 6:30 p.m., followed by a talk by Prof. Sharon Green.

The Israeli film The Second Watch, a short comedy about an Israeli soldier guarding the Jordanian border, is to be followed by the Israeli feature film Blind Man's Bluff, about a young pianist who distances herself from her parents and ex-boyfriend, followed by a talk by Shlomo Schwartzberg. Oct 15 at 5 p.m.

The modern Yiddish film Me Ivan, You Abraham, which depicts Jewish life in Poland in the 1930s, is to be screened Oct. 24 at 6:30 p.m., followed by a talk by Ellie Kellman, professor of Yiddish.

For more information, contact the JSU at 416-978-0421.

Book Signing: Raffi, the legendary children's musician, is slated to sign his new book, Rise and Shine, at the Children's Book Store, 2532 Yonge St., Toronto, Oct. 12 at 10 a.m. 416-480-0233.

Joseph to Return: Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, starring Donny Osmond, returns to Toronto by popular demand. With lyrics by Tim Rice and music by Andrew Lloyd Webber, the musical is a joyous retelling of the familiar biblical story of Joseph and his 11 brothers. Opens Wed. March 12, 1997, at the Elgin Theatre for a limited run.

Israeli Films Tour Ontario: The Israeli film The Summer of Aviya and its sequel Under the Domim Tree have both enjoyed long runs in Toronto of 10 and 12 weeks respectively, which are unprecedented for Israeli films.

The films are based on two best-selling autobiographical novels by Gila Almagor, the first lady of Israeli cinema. They were directed by Eli Cohen, whose features also include The Soft Kill and the Canadian-produced The Quarrel.

This month and next, the films begin limited runs in Hamilton, Ottawa and London. Both were recently featured at a film festival in Sudbury.

Juggling two simchas

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Howard Pechet has to juggle two simchahs in the same week. His father, Eugene, the pioneer Jewish hotelier from Edmonton, is celebrating his 85th birthday and Stage West Hotel Theatre restaurant in Mississauga, of which Pechet is executive director, is observing its 10th anniversary.

But Pechet, 46, takes problems like this in stride. He still remembers, acutely, that when he started producing repertory dinner shows he was shocked to find that his cast had to start rehearsing a new show while still playing the old.

Perhaps he copes because he was born into the hotel and dinner theatre business, though his first ambition was to be an English professor.

He is a nephew of Edmonton-born Arthur Hiller, a Hollywood director of note and president of the Academy of Arts and Science, which stages the Oscar awards.

"Arthur has been an influence on me, no doubt," he said. "He's opened doors for me in Hollywood and brought me in touch with agents for the stars we need in our shows."

In line with his theory that the TV-weaned baby boomers are the big market for his shows, Pechet has hired TV names for his marquees. For example, Pamela Bellwood, of Dynasty, is heading up the English comedy Funny Money, the 10th anniversary attraction at Stage West, running Sept. 18 to Nov. 17.

He has nothing but admiration for his father who started out as a garment salesman and now owns 19 hotels. "When he was out on the road he used to come back to North Battleford every Saturday because it had the only hotel with a bathtub. He lived in a cabin while he supervised the building of his first hotel. He introduced mixed drinking in Alberta, opened the first hotel with radio and TV, the first one that permitted dancing."

Among the guests at Eugene Pechet's birthday party in Edmonton will be Arthur and Gwen Hiller (his sister) coming in from Los Angeles for the event.

The secret of a successful dinner theatre is to offer good food, and both his hotel and theatre are dependent on the same kitchen, says the younger Pechet.

He decided to build the 242-suite hotel in Mississauga in 1990 because it had a big local population (500,000) to draw on and was close to the intersection of Dixie Road and 401.

Pechet, who also directs the Stage West dinner theatre in Calgary, recently observed his 25th wedding anniversary with his wife, Henriette, who hails from Holland. They have two sons, Jason, 19, a hotel administration student at Cornell University, and David 16, an 11th grader.

Performers flock to rehearsal of Khelem musical

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The simple-minded and good-natured people of the fictional village of Khelem (Chelm) try to capture the moon's reflection in a water barrel. They tend to laugh their worries away. Are they, as tradition contends, the fools of Chelm, or are they really wise?

This is the Jewish folklore around which entertainer Nathan Garnick has built a musical and which attracted 40 performers of all ages (one-third are teenagers or children) to rehearse on summer nights.

The result: The Simpletones of Khelem plays one performance Oct. 22, at Leah Posluns Theatre.

"We were astounded at the response to the item in The CJN asking for people to take part in a Yiddish-English musical," said Garnick. "We were told we couldn't get people out for rehearsals in the summer but they've literally come out of the woodwork, people we've never seen before, and we're delighted at the number of new faces and young people."

The Simpletones of Khelem is based on two playlets written and directed by Garnick, under the musical direction of Paul Mathew. Some English will be given in the dialogue or lyrics, but mostly they'll be in Yiddish. The Otz Tza Tza klezmer band of young musicians led by Jonna Lightstone will take part.

Nathan Garnick

"Not only does everybody on stage sing, but the audience will be unable to resist singing along with the chassidic melodies," Garnick said.

"It's fine to have Yiddish courses at the university level, I support them, but we need to interest children at a much earlier level."

He hopes the musical will kick start a move to recognize the potential of drama in teaching Yiddish to children.

Many of the teenagers and children in the cast come from homes where Yiddish is spoken, but to a few the language was entirely new. The performers range in age from seven to 70.

"A lot of them have studied music and singing and were delighted at the chance to appear in a show. At the first rehearsal one little boy said, 'Will we get a chance to bow to the audience after the curtain comes down?' "

Tickets are $10 purchased in advance or $15 at the door (far groyser fardiner) $4 for students at the door with ID, one eynikil (grandchild) under 13 is admitted free with a ticket holder.

For information call 416-635-0720.

Baycrest awards to assist health care aides

TORONTO — The Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care has launched a new awards program to assist health care aides in furthering their education.

The inaugural Nancy and Sam Ruth Nursing Education Awards were awarded recently to Baycrest staffers Monica Walters, Domingo Cabagyo, Mavis Hope, Janet Tsang and Cecilia Williams.

Health care aides provide personal care services, such as help with dressing and feeding, to residents and patients and are required to complete a health care aide program.

Made possible through an endowment fund established by Sam Ruth, president emeritus of the Baycrest Foundation, and his family, the awards provide financial assistance in the form of scholarships and tuition reimbursements to help recipients pursue further studies related to nursing.

"Health care aides are the staff who spend the most time with clients and make a tremendous contribution to the quality of their lives," says Ruth, who was executive director of Baycrest for 25 years.

"They're the first people they see in the morning and the last at night. Aides provide not only physical care but emotional support in what can sometimes be a stressful situation for elderly people and their families."

Teva seeks FDA approval for MS drug

By JENNIFER FRIEDLIN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – After 11 months of review proceedings, Teva Pharmaceutical Industries recently received the recommendation of a U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) advisory panel for its multiple sclerosis drug, Copaxone.

The peripheral and central nervous system drugs advisory panel unanimously recommended that the FDA approve Copaxone, Teva's first original drug, and ruled that it is both safe and effective. Past history indicates that the FDA usually follows the panel's advice.

If Copaxone gets the FDA approval, it will be the first Israeli invented and developed drug to come to the world market.

The next big question, if Copaxone does get the FDA's final approval, is for what uses the drug will be approved.

Developed at the Weizmann Institute, Copaxone is said to reduce the frequency and severity of MS attacks.

Montrealers make Maccabiah men's golf team

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — It took two dramatic sudden-death holes.

But after it was all over, Maccabi Canada had six of its first athletes — golfers — picked for next summer's 15th "Jewish Olympics," the Maccabiah Games in Israel.

Although they all happen to hail from Montreal, said national athletic committee chair Bob Luxenberg, 14 other golfers from Toronto and Vancouver also competed at the national trials, held at Ottawa's Rideau View Golf and Country Club.

Marsh, with four Maccabiahs behind him, will be the team's veteran player; Matthews, at age 20, its youngest, and according to Luxenberg, a true phenom since he only took his first swipe at the tee three year ago.

The final selection, he said, came after two days and 54 holes of hard-fought, emotionally-draining play and under contantly-threatening skies. Potential team-members had to have a six handicap or better to qualify for the trials.

The team's sixth position came down to a sudden-death face-off between Segal, who had failed to make the team twice before, and Maccabiah veteran Danny Zack of Vancouver, who played with a slight injury.

"It was the 'wiley veteran' versus the 'rookie,' " Luxenberg said. "Segal had never been able to break through in the clutch before."

Adding to the drama was the fact that the Ottawa golf course (veteran Jewish golfers John Holzman and his son Billy are very active at the club) was literally new terrain for the 20 contenders. Luxenberg said a "neutral" site was deliberately chosen so no golfer would have an edge.

In terms of Maccabiah expectations, Luxenberg said the six had a good shot at a team medal.

Although Canada won no golf medals in 1993 (the United States took both the team and individual golds), the 1973 men's team garnered a bronze and a member of the 1989 squad won an individual silver.

Luxenberg indicated that it's uncertain whether Canada will be able to find the minimum number of women golfers needed to qualify for a team entry, although individual Canadian women will compete.

At previous Maccabiahs, women golfers such as Terrie Brecher, Amy Weiskopf and Ivy Steinberg won several individual and team golds for Canada.

Alumni tournament set

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Eight teams of hoops-loving former CHAT students will take to the basketball court on Oct. 13 and 14 in the first-ever CHAT Alumni Tournament in Memory of Israel Becker.

The tournament is a fundraiser to benefit the upcoming Israel Becker CHAT Invitational Basketball Tournament that is slated to tip off in December. Each alumni team will ante up $250 to enter and almost all proceeds will go to the winter event, said Josh Sugar, one of the former students organizing the alumni tournament.

Former students from New York and Winnipeg are expected to participate and there's been some interest from as far as Florida and Israel, Sugar said.

The tournament will take place at the Bathurst Jewish Centre and is open to the public. Teams will play three games each to be followed by a playoff round. The final is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 14 and the public is welcome to attend. A donation box will be available for those wishing to support the winter tournament.

Sugar, who along with Eitan Mammon is organizing the alumni event, said former students dating back to the class of '85 are expected to participate.

Hoops event honors student

By AMY ROSEN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Almost three years ago, Israel Becker's life was cut short by an automobile accident.

Becker (Bubba to his many friends) was a special person who was heavily involved in synagogue activities. He also had a great love for high school athletics and basketball was his passion. He was a graduate of the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT).

CHAT has decided to organize a basketball tournament for Jewish high schools in Canada and the United States. CHAT teams have participated in such tournaments in other cities over the years and its coaches felt it was time for the school to host its own tournament.

The Israel Becker CHAT Invitational Basketball Tournament was created in his memory.

Rob Eklove and Aubrey Zimmerman are the tournament coordinators. Eklove says this type of tournament is long overdue and he's especially excited about starting it up in honor of his friend.

"It's meant to be a celebration of the Jewish community, bringing Jewish high school basketball teams together in Toronto and fostering new links and friendships among our respective communities," says Eklove. "It's a living tribute to Becker, who embodied those qualities in his commitment to the community and his love for basketball."

Hosted by CHAT, the tournament will bring together teams from eight schools from across Canada and the United States to compete over a weekend.

From Dec. 5 to 8, the weekend will include the basketball tournament, a Shabbaton program for the athletes, a tour of Toronto and an awards ceremony and banquet.

For more information call Eklove at 416-785-7949.

The Inside Back

About families

Dear Susan,

My 6-year-old daughter has just started Grade 1. She refuses to leave home. She is teary, anxious and clingy when I take her to school, and when I finally get her there, she insists that I stay with her. I feel terribly helpless when this happens. What should I do?

Dear Reader,

While your daughter may appear to dislike school, her behavior is really masking another fear – separation anxiety.

Your 6-year-old is clearly showing signs of not being ready to leave you. You might consider whether she demonstrated signs of separation anxiety during previous developmental stages. How responsive were you or your husband to her anxieties and what strategies did you develop to assist her in overcoming these struggles? You should also think about how attentive your own parents were to your own separation anxiety and what strategies they provided you with.

In my experience, children will often re-enact experiences that their own parents faced as children. This situation provides you with an opportunity to empathize with your child and rewrite that script.

You may start by asking your child what she fears most when she leaves you. When she volunteers the information, do not dismiss it, no matter how insignificant it may seem. Encourage your child to confront her worst fears. Have her think about the best and worst things that could happen if she goes to school and use that to divide the transition to anxiety-free separation into manageable "bites." Make sure that you are going through the adventure together, and that mom and dad will be with her the whole way.

Next, you give your child strategies for overcoming her fears. Reward her for her successes while giving her permission to slide. She needs permission to struggle, yet to feel a sense of mastery or task accomplishment. Your ability to guide her through this process will depend on your own feelings of confidence and security – if you feel helpless, she will surely feel more conflicted about her struggle.

Sometimes having a husband assist in the drop-off helps to define a boundary that is helpful for both mother and child. Time warnings help the child prepare themselves for the eventuality of leaving. Reassure your child you will be picking her up at a specific time. Allow your child to be clingy until she is ready to be more independent, while at the same time decreasing your stay at school.

Susan Leventhal is a family, marital and individual therapist, who has been practising for more than 17 years.

Light-hearted revue a night of nostalgia

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Thousands of people still recall the Harry Harris Jewish Hour, broadcast from CHML 900 in Hamilton every Sunday morning for 30 years, beginning in the 1930s.

Who can forget the cheery Shalom, abee min zayt zikh (as long as we need each other) greeting that marked the start of each show?

Fans of the show can take a walk down memory lane with Gloria Valentine and Murray Ellis's version of Another Sunday on the Harry Harris Jewish Hour, performed recently as part of Artsweek '96 in affiliation with the North York Public Library.

Ellis, an original host on the show, and Valentine first conceived the Harry Harris Jewish Hour Revisited for Artsweek '94 and the audience was so taken with the nostalgic stroll through songs, skits, authentic announcements and social events of the day, presented in Yiddish and English that Ellis and Valentine repeated their performance last year.

This year's version begins with Ellis welcoming the audience to "Hamilton, to the first live studio audience ever to see The Harry Harris Jewish Hour, brought to you by the Murray House, 207 Beverly St. And now, Molly Picon, appearing at the Victory Theatre, will sing the Greene Cousine, brought also by the Harbord Fish Market who sells herring and white fish at 10 cents a pound."

The ads for such places as Victory Florists, phone number Adelaide 1618, or Rotman's Mens Wear (Speak to Mendel and take it out on the installation plan), made as much a hit with the mostly middle-aged and older audience as Valentine's version of Picon, Jenny Goldstein, Lillian Lux and Gitl Shvantzkopf, direct from Cosmopolitan Opera Company.

The crowd also roared over such oldies as the man who went to the doctor and said, "Doc, I'm aching from arthritis.'" "It's good to know you," the doctor replied. "I'm Rosenbaum from Chicago." Many remembered the woman who wanted a divorce after 58 years because, "enough is enough."

With featured guests Allen Farkas and Michael Lebovic as Dzhigan and Schumacher and Nina Shapilsky at the piano, the just-over-an-hour show is fast-paced and light-hearted – a good evening out for original fans, those who remember their parents listening to the show, or anyone looking for a show with Yiddishe tam.

For information on booking Another Sunday on the Harry Harris Jewish Hour, call manager Sharon Brooker at 905-669-6191.

ספרותנו

Arafat hardens tone

'Things could explode any moment'

By JON IMMANUEL
and DAVID MAKOVSKY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — In his first major speech since the violent clashes last month, Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat sharply attacked Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last week, warning that the Palestinians would not accept peace at any price.

In a 35-minute speech to the Palestinian legislative council in Ramallah, Arafat said, "We opted for peace, but we will not be forced to kneel for peace... Netanyahu has to know that nobody can threaten the Palestinian people... There is no doubt we must be prepared for all contingencies."

The lead story in the Palestinian daily Al Hayat al Jadida, which is considered particularly close to Arafat, was an interview he gave to the Egyptian news magazine Al-Mussawar with the banner headline, Arafat cannot prevent an intifadah. Arafat warned in the interview that "it could explode at any moment."

Again accusing Netanyahu personally rather than the Israeli government, Arafat said, "Netanyahu is trying to change the agreements, directly or indirectly."

Arafat's chief negotiator Saeb Erekat said that the government is trying "to create two towns in Hebron and that is simply not acceptable."

U.S. officials passed a message from Netanyahu to Arafat this week saying that Israel seeks to resolve the Hebron issue speedily. Despite this, it seems Arafat suspects that

Argentine bomb leads to neo-Nazis

By SERGIO KIERNAN
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

BUENOS AIRES — The official in charge of investigating the July 1994 bombing of the Jewish community centre here is pursuing a lead that links suspects arrested in connection with the case to American neo-Nazi groups, sources close to the case said.

At least one suspect, arrested in December during raids in and around a major military base outside Buenos Aires, was found in possession of a sizable amount of American neo-Nazi literature, the sources said.

Police found hidden at the suspect's residence several books, leaflets and magazines edited by a group called White Aryan Resistance, which was founded by American extremist Tom Metzger.

Sources said Judge Juan Jose Galeano, who is in charge of the case, is investigating the extent of influence that group and other American militia movements may have in Argentina.

Jewish leaders here and abroad have complained about what they describe as the slow pace of the investigation, which has to date provided no satisfactory explanation for the attack.

The bombing that destroyed the headquarters of the Argentine Jewish Mutual Aid Association (AMIA), left 86 dead and more than 300 wounded.

An earlier attack on the Israeli Embassy in Buenos Aires also remains unsolved. The car bombing of the embassy in March 1992 killed 29 people and left more than 100 injured.

Making his first public statement about the case in months, Galeano apologized this week for the length of time the AMIA investigation has taken.

"It has not been easy. We are not experts in terrorism," he said.

"People must understand that the courts are making great strides in trying to solve the AMIA bombing, and that some of the information is too sensitive to be divulged."

The News in Brief

ISRAEL

Senior Immigrants

JERUSALEM – As if their longevity was not enough of an accomplishment, two women who recently made aliyah may also hold the record of being the world's oldest immigrants.

The Jewish Agency was contacted last week by the Guinness Book of World Records for information about Rachel Shmashiashvilli, 111, who arrived here from the former Soviet republic of Georgia last week and another 111-year-old woman who came from the Russian province of Chechnya several months ago.

Year of Zionism

The Hebrew year 5757 was chosen by the government as the Year of Zionism to mark the 100th anniversary of the First Zionist Congress in Basle, Switzerland, which took place in August 1897.

Qatar Shelves Plans

JERUSALEM – The Persian Gulf state of Qatar has decided to postpone opening its trade office in Tel Aviv because of what it sees as the hard-line political stance of the government of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

WORLD

Dole on the Mideast

HARTFORD – Republican presidential candidate Robert Dole, who accused President Bill Clinton last week of arranging the emergency Middle East summit as a photo opportunity, has now stated that the peace process should not become an American political issue.

During the presidential debate, Dole also charged the Clinton administration with managing the recent Middle East crisis – and overall American foreign policy – on an ad-hoc basis. He said the administration had not achieved much at the summit.

French Forgive Bibi

PARIS – French Jewish leaders appear to have made peace with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu after he spent his only evening in Paris with the French branch of his Likud party.

During a recent trip to France, the Israeli premier angered Jewish community leaders when he declined to attend a traditional dinner for visiting Israeli leaders.

Rabbi Honored

CLEVELAND — Toronto native Rabbi Lawrence Zierler, spiritual leader of Kehillat Yaakov-Warrensville Center Synagogue, will be honored at the shul's annual dinner next month.

The dinner will celebrate Rabbi Zierler's completion of a decade of service in the rabbinate. Rabbi Zierler is the son of David and Marion Zierler of Willowdale.

Synagogue Bombed

BUDAPEST – A bomb exploded outside the Dohany Street Synagogue in downtown Budapest last week.

Police reported that no one was injured and that the synagogue was not damaged.

The bomb was hidden in a garbage can across the street from the synagogue, according to the police.

Shul Goundbreaking

MOSCOW – Russia's prime minister and other government officials provided significant support to the country's Jewish community during a groundbreaking ceremony here last week for a new synagogue.

The synagogue will be erected in memory of the 2.7 million Soviet Jews that perished during the Holocaust.

Holocaust Denial Ban

LONDON – Opposition leaders here have said that if they are elected, they would make Holocaust denial a criminal offense.

The pledge by the Labor party recently came in response to a lengthy campaign by Jewish groups such as the Board of Deputies and the Holocaust Education Trust.

Headstones Overturned

LONDON – Scottish police have been treating the overturning of 94 headstones in Edinburgh's Piers Hill cemetery as a racial attack because only those in the Jewish section of the graveyard were vandalized.

The Jewish section has more than 600 graves, dating back some 50 years.

Creative Writing Contest

NEW YORK – A prize of $1,000 (US) will be given by the Coalition for the Advancement of Jewish Education (CAJE) for the best original short story on a Jewish theme or topic in the Seventh Annual David Dornstein Memorial Creative Writing Contest for Young Adult Writers.

The contest is open to writers between the ages of 18 and 35. The deadline is Dec 31, 1996. Judging will take place between Jan. 1 and May 30, 1997.

'Jewish ridings' vanish as electoral map changes

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Changes to federal ridings and provincial ones in Ontario will mean the elimination of some well-known electoral districts in Toronto's Jewish community, and the creation of a new riding where Jewish residents will comprise a sizeable element.

In keeping with increases to Canada's population, which recently broke the 30 million mark, Elections Canada recently released a new federal electoral map. It redraws most ridings and creates a few new ones, based on population shifts culled from the 1991 census.

In the next federal election, in 1997 or in 1998, Canadians will elect 301 MPs, up from 295.

The reverse will be true in Ontario, where voters in the next provincial election will elect 27 fewer MPPs. That's because Premier Mike Harris recently followed through on an election promise to slash the size of government.

But in the federal election, Ontarians will vote for four more MPs, raising the number from 99 to 103.

In the next provincial contest, Ontario voters will pick 103 MPPs, down from 130. The proposed new provincial ridings will have the same boundaries and names as the federal ones, meaning some ridings Jewish voters have become used to — like Wilson Heights and Oriole — will disappear.

The changes will also create a new riding — Thornhill — which will be at least one-quarter Jewish. The new district mirrors the trend of younger Jewish families who have flocked to the suburbs north of Toronto, many of them from Montreal.

Maurizio Bevilacqua

On the federal scene, Canada's most Jewish riding — Mount Royal, held by Liberal Sheila Finestone — will not see its boundaries changed, likely a result of a net population loss in Quebec. The riding takes in all of the Montreal-area cities of Cote St. Luc, Hampstead and the Town of Mount Royal, and is estimated to be 50 percent Jewish.

The Montreal riding of Saint-Henri-Westmount will be rejigged. The new riding of Westmount-Ville-Marie will include a good portion of the city's Snowdon and Cote-des-Neiges districts.

In Ontario, federal ridings will be redrawn but not drastically. A dramatic change will take place with the creation of Thornhill riding, which will be carved out of York North, held by Liberal Maurizio Bevilacqua, and Markham-Whitchurch-Stouffville, held by independent Jag Bhaduria.

York North is currently Canada's most populous riding, at about 260,000, roughly double the average population of a federal riding. It's approximately 10 percent Jewish, Bevilacqua told The CJN.

New riding of Thornhill at least 25% Jewish

Thornhill riding will be bounded by Steeles Avenue, Highway 400, Rutherford Road and Highway 404. It will have a population of 95,000, and Bevilacqua estimates it will be 25 to 35 percent Jewish. The riding will be home to several synagogues, day schools and a burgeoning Jewish population.

Bevilacqua plans to run in the next election in the new riding of Vaughan-Aurora. The MP said he's "sad" to be losing so many of his Jewish supporters.

Elinor Caplan

At the provincial level, Thornhill riding will be carved from York Centre, held by Al Palladini, and Markham, represented by David Tsubouchi.

Because Ontario's provincial ridings will conform to their federal counterparts, Wilson Heights, the province's most Jewish riding, will be split between three districts: Willowdale, York Centre and a small part of Eglinton-Lawrence.

Oriole, which is about 10 percent Jewish and held by MPP Elinor Caplan, will be split between Willowdale and Don Valley East. Caplan told The CJN she will next run in Don Valley East, which she estimates will be less than five percent Jewish.

Charles Harnick's Willowdale riding will be enlarged to conform to its federal equivalent, now held by Jim Peterson. The provincial riding will include a larger section of Bathurst Street in the Finch Avenue area, currently in Wilson Heights.

The riding of Oakwood will be swallowed up by several surrounding districts, including St. Paul's, the federal version of which has a good sized Jewish population and is represented by Barry Campbell.

As well, the provincial ridings of Eglinton and Lawrence will be partially incorporated into Eglinton-Lawrence. The federal riding of the same name, now held by Joe Volpe, will likely pick up some Jewish voters, as it will be enlarged to include a larger chunk of the north side of Eglinton Avenue between Avenue Road and Bathurst.

Also standing to gain some Jewish constituents will be MP Art Eggleton, whose federal York Centre riding will be rejigged to include the Bathurst-Steeles area and its large Russian-Jewish emigre population.

Testing PA's record against Oslo Accords

During his testimony in Washington last July 23 to the Subcommittee on International Operations and Human Rights of the U.S. Congressional House Committee on International Relations, Prof. Irwin Cotler devoted a substantial portion of time discussing the record of the Palestinian Authority's (PA) compliance with their obligations under the Oslo accords and under the Cairo Agreement (the Israel -PLO Gaza/Jericho Agreement of May 1994).

Cotler anticipated that some committee members might question the connection between the PA's record on human rights and its record on treaty compliance. Thus, he marshalled no fewer than seven reasons to justify the relevance of his eight pages of evidence concerning PLO violations of the peace accords. In his own words, these are his reasons.

"First, and most important, peace and human rights are both inter-dependent and indivisible, we will have both or neither Second, peace and justice are no less interdependent and indivisible; again, as the cases of Bosnia, Rwanda, South Africa reveal, we will have both or neither.

"Third, the question of whether or not there is compliance with the undertakings of a peace agreement is in fact a 'human rights' issue itself. For it goes to the core of whether one is complying with a basic principle of international law - that agreements are binding upon the parties and must be performed by them in good faith. And it goes to the core of respect for bilateral and international undertakings about the most profound of values - a just and lasting peace.

"Fourth, many of the undertakings, as set forth below, have a 'human rights' dimension to them. Accordingly, a material breach of these undertakings is tantamount to a material breach of human rights law.

"Fifth...compliance is vital lest the absence of compliance become the pretext or principle for the unravelling of the agreement.

"Sixth...violations may also threaten international peace and security itself and the whole corpus of human rights within it.

"Finally, the agreements have core provisions committing the parties expressly to the promotion and protection of human rights, and to the implementation of the agreement in accordance with internationally accepted standards of human rights and the rule of law."

Please see The Kirshner File page 11

Not one to avoid detail, Cotler testifies to 11 "principal" violations by the PA, or the PLO as he interchangeably refers to the Authority, of the agreements with Israel. The list is limited to systemic violations which stem from the decisions or actions of the top leadership of the PA. It does not include cases of local failures or mistakes in behavior.

Cotler lists the following violations: failure to confiscate arms and disarm militias; refusal to extradite suspected terrorists; failure to punish [terrorists] using [instead] the PA court system; incitement to terror by top PA leadership; failure to prevent incitement; harassment of suspected former collaborators with Israel; failure to provide information on MiAs; failure to change the PLO Covenant; failure to hold democratic elections and establish a democratic regime; PLO police activity in Eastern Jerusalem; illegal drilling for water.

In Cotler's mind, the violations regarding incitement to terror and the failure to prevent incitement deserved special attention. Not only did he discuss them under the heading of PA violations of its commitments to Israel, he also gave it extensive coverage under his summary of human rights abuses toward the Palestinian population.

Terrorist violence is "the ultimate assault on human rights." Thus, Cotler argues, the commitment by the PA to struggle against terrorism should be subjected to "a fundamental human rights" standard. The PA should be taking active steps to prohibit incitement to hatred and violence. This is the minimum behavior, Cotler points out, required of the PA by the norms of international law. It is also an express commitment made by the PA to Israel under the agreements which it signed, namely, "to take all necessary measures to prevent acts of terrorism."

"Education against terror, or at a very minimum, abstaining from incitement to terror, is a necessary measure to alter historic attitudes which have made engaging in acts of terrorism appear acceptable, if not also legitimate to the broad masses and desirable to the potential recruits for Hamas, Islamic Jihad and other Palestinian terror groups.

"Indeed, it is not surprising, as a forthcoming report by Peace Watch reveals, that given the 30-year tenure of the Palestinian National Covenant...that polls taken within the last year alone indicate that as many as 70 percent of Palestinians support some kind of armed attack against Israeli targets. Moreover, as the report puts it, the knowledge by terrorists that they are acting in a manner encouraged or at least tolerated by the PLO leadership of the PA is likely to embolden Palestinian militants with the sense that they are engaging not in acts of terrorism but in legitimate, nationalistic, even historic acts.

"The question then, and the test of whether the PA is complying with internationally accepted human rights standards on this matter, is this: What is the message regarding anti-Israel violence that has been transmitted by the PA leadership to the Palestinian public, particularly to those young men who are the potential recruitment base for the terrorists?"

Cotler suggests that a proper answer to his own question can be obtained only after referring to the statements and declarations made by the PA leadership regarding the peace process and terror, weighing general statements about opposing terrorism against specific statements praising terrorists, examining whether the PLO Covenant has been amended, looking at what is being taught about terror and the peace process in the Palestinian educational system and, finally, examining the measures taken against those who engaged in inciting terror.

Space does not allow further reference to the myriad of important details contained in Cotlers's testimony about the state of human rights in the territories administered by the PA. I conclude by returning to my introduction to the "Cotler dossier" in my column of Oct.3.

"Against the backdrop of the killing and the mayhem [three] weeks ago in Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza, a discussion of the state of human rights under the Palestinian Authority might seem somewhat surrealistic. But the two subjects are related."

Cotler conclusively proved the connection.

Kalejs suggests conspiracy out to frame him

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In the world according to Konrads Kalejs, the KGB is out to get him, witnesses have been pressured to lie about him and immigration officials from three countries have failed to accurately record his statements.

In testimony last week at an immigration hearing, Kalejs added further details to his theory, that, boiled down to essentials, suggests the Russians are attempting to frame him.

Kalejs said the Soviets forged his signatures on wartime documents of the Latvian Security Police Battalion, in which he merely acknowledged receipt of cigarette rations; he said documents attesting to his participation in Latvian killing units were also forgeries; he suggested witnesses in England and Germany who testified against him were old and sick and not reliable; and he questioned the reliability of Soviet witnesses called by his own lawyer for his 1987 U.S. immigration case.

Kalejs, an Australian citizen, was testifying at a hearing to determine whether he will be allowed to remain in Canada. Government officials contend he was involved in war crimes as a member of the Latvian Auxiliary Security Police, more commonly known as the Arajs Kommando (AK) after its leader, Viktors Arajs.

Last week, Kalejs was confronted with several statements given by Arajs, in which Kalejs was described as a member of the notorious unit that collaborated with the Nazis in the murder of approximately 30,000 Latvian Jews. Kalejs denies being a member of the Arajs Kommando and says he didn't meet Arajs until December 1944, after the AK was disbanded, when both were serving as officers in the newly-created Latvian Legion of the SS.

But in one long, rambling statement, given to to the court in West Germany during his 1979 trial, Arajs stated' "First Lt. Kalejs accompanied [SS Gen.] Stahlecker to Russia, where Stahlecker was killed in February 1942."

In another statement to the court, Arajs said that "Kalejs served under [Walter] Schroeder" and that "Schroeder was with the public order police." He also testified that Schroeder "was the top leader of the police and an intermediary between German and Latvian authorities" and that his "principal task was to build up the Latvian public order police force."

Kalejs denied accompanying Stahlecker to Russia, though he admitted serving under him in only one battle. He said Schroeder asked him to organize a Latvian ski unit and he questioned Arajs' credibility, suggesting that from "what I have read about Arajs, Arajs was a sick man ... at his trial."

Referring to the battle of Saniki at which Stahlecker was killed, Kalejs said former AK members were "making up stories" when they testified that the unit took revenge for his death. Earlier testimony indicated that the village was burned down and villagers massacred by the AK company headed by Kalejs.

"If revenge was taken, I don't know about it ... that was not done by Latvian soldiers," he said.

At another point during cross-examination, Kalejs said a witness who testified that the village was burned in retaliation for Stahlecker's death "spent 20 years in Siberia ... He was prepared by KGB people so what he said during the television hearing doesn't mean anything at all."

Kalejs repeated the same allegation regarding several other witnesses who testified on videotape in Latvia, but gave no evidence to support it.

When confronted by a list of half a dozen Soviet-based witnesses called by his own lawyer, Kalejs maintained that they too had been instructed by the KGB.

He provided no evidence to substantiate that allegation, though at one point, he referred to his former brother-in-law, Alfreds Putnins, who Kalejs suggested was pressured by the KGB to change his testimony overnight to make it more damaging to him.

However, evidence earlier in the hearing showed that in September 1987, Putnins testified on a single day during which he said he didn't know whether Kalejs commanded a company of guards at the Salaspils concentration camp or if he even served there.

Hearing that testimony, U.S. Justice Department lawyers confronted Putnins with a protocol he had given two years earlier that was more damaging to Kalejs. In it he said Kalejs commanded the Salaspils guard unit. The U.S. lawyers also pointed out that in 1985, Putnins testified that his wife, Kalejs' sister, told him her brother was a member of the Arajs Kommando.

Kalejs also questioned the testimony of Harry Svikeris, a former AK member who told Scotland Yard that Kalejs was also in the unit.

"Svikeris during the hearings was a very sick man; so you can't depend on what he was talking about at that time," Kalejs said.

He made a similar suggestion about Arajs, who in 1984, while serving a life sentence in a West German prison, identified him as an AK "company commander in February 1942."

During cross-examination by Justice Department lawyer Donald MacIntosh, Kalejs was confronted with a statement by a former AK member that he had appointed a platoon to stand guard while Gypsies were shot.

You must look "at his background, which destroys completely that testimony," Kalejs said of the witness.

Macintosh then pointed to a certificate signed by an SS officer attesting to Kalejs' service in the security police and SD of Einstazgruppe A (a Nazi killing unit) in Locknja. The document stated that from Feb. 18 to April 26, 1942, Kalejs took part in battles at Nasva, Saniki and Rogova.

MacIntosh also read from a report of Einsatzgruppe A that 38 Jews and one Gypsy were shot at Locknja.

To determine the truth of a document, you must know where it came from. "If it came from a place I am suspicious of, then it's not correct," Kalejs said.

Kalejs also questioned the accuracy of several reports prepared by Australian and American immigration authorities. The first, prepared before he immigrated to Australia, records Kalejs' version of wartime events but does not include his claim he served on the Eastern front from January to October 1942 fighting partisans.

"I really didn't know what the elderly, overworked lady put in the form," Kalejs said. "I told her and

Seniors urged to express anger at the ballot box

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In the next year or two seniors and others hit by budget cuts to social programs must strike back at the ballot box, Al Gorlick, chair of Alliance of Seniors, said at a rally at St. Lawrence Centre recently.

"The only thing a politician understands is being re-elected," Gorlick told the 500 in attendandce. "Don't try to reason with them, they'll only prevaricate, just say you are angry with what they are doing, and show your anger when you vote."

The federal election is due in a year and the provincial election in two years, he said.

Several Jewish groups brought members to the rally. A protest demonstration planned for the square across the road had to be cancelled because of rain.

The strongest applause of the day came after speaker Judy Rebick declared: "I hope the whole city of Toronto is shut down on Oct. 25." She was referring to labor's protest action on that day against the provincial Conservative government of Mike Harris.

Furthermore, "the federal Liberal government of Jean Chretien has done more to destroy social benefits in this country than the [Brian] Mulroney Tories," said Rebick, co-host of an Ontario TV talk show who described herself as the station's "house radical."

"The right wing in this country is trying to convince everyone that we are the special interest groups. We are the essential and crucial groups who brought in these social services. Don't believe what you read in the papers, that our protests are just a '60s thing. Don't let them privatize us in a dog eat dog society."

Rebick said the Tories in Ontario had turned the clock on labor relations back to the 1930s without even consulting the unions.

Mistrust of politicians has reached such a point in Canada that it worries her that people will bcome apathetic and pave the way for regressive political developments, she said.

"Our two main political parties are on the way to becoming like the Republicans and Democrats in the United States, where there is so little difference between them they could be called Republocrats."

Disadvantaged people in the community are asking for justice, not charity, said Rabbi Dow Marmur, senior rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple. He warned that society must turn away from a "mine is mine and yours is yours" attitude. "For all its appearance of fairness, that punishes those who have little."

In the Hebrew tradition tzedakah is a call for justice to the disadvantaged, not charity. "The claim that charity will replace compassion is false," Rabbi Marmur said.

The so-called crisis in the funding of the Canada Pension Plan (CPP) is a "fake" said Dan Benedict, co-chair, Ontario Seniors Coalition, a retired auto worker. "The cost of CPP to the government is less than in any country in the Group of Seven." He warned that any government ministry that could reduce old age security benefits could do the same to the Canada Pension Plan.

"The Ontario government is most open in attacking social benefits," he said. "The federal government is not so open, but it is collaborating."

Resolutions were approved calling for maintenance of the CPP, restoring the universality of old age security, closing corporate tax loop holes, maintaining rent controls and making post-secondary education education accessible. The resolutions will be sent to Chretien and Harris governments.

Kalejs suggests conspiracy

I didn't know what she wrote there."

MacIntosh later pointed to a 1956 U.S. immigration document in which Kalejs lists his occupation during 1942 as "farmer." MacIntosh suggested Kalejs didn't mention his service during 1942 to steer away from suspicions of involvement in war crimes.

Kalejs maintained he answered all questions truthfully, but "I don't know what they wrote down."

(Earlier, he questioned the notes of a Canadian Immigration officer who recorded Kalejs' claim that the Russians, and not the Nazis, had murdered 27,800 Latvian Jews.)

MacIntosh also confronted Kalejs on his claim that U.S. authorities put up roadblocks to the testimony of a Latvian witness, who Kalejs said would have helped his case. MacIntosh showed Kalejs a list of Latvian witnesses that his U.S. lawyer wanted to question and pointed out that the "very important" witness was not on the list.

"I'm not a lawyer, but somebody goofed there," Kalejs said.

Victims of AIDS honored at Holy Blossom

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Those who have died of AIDS were honored by friends, loved ones and family at a recent memorial service sponsored by Holy Blossom Temple AIDS committee.

Beginning and ending with Hinay mah tov umah na-im, shevet achim gam yachad (How good and pleasant it is when people sit together in harmony) the service included prayers, candlelighting, readings, songs, personal remembrances and a candle-lit Kaddish and reading of names in the temple's courtyard.

One by one, people stood up to talk, their voices sometimes cracking, about loved ones who died from AIDS.

"Let us help keep alive the memory of people who have touched our lives. There are friends who touched us deeply and there are sons, lovers and those we cared about but didn't get to know well enough," said one.

Another said that a "thief has paid me a visit twice and stole the lives of two friends. AIDS is not prejudiced, it knows no sex, race, color of skin or geographical boundaries."

Andrew Cohen spoke about Kael Shriar, a past co-chair of the committee, who succumbed to the disease last winter, and said that the stigma, isolation and rejection is the worst part of AIDS.

"Let us honor Kael's memory by a renewed commitment to the fight against the disease and to live life to its fullest."

In a reading entitled In Strength for Those Who Mourn, the reader spoke to G-d and asked that he "fill us with trust in You, and turn us again to the tasks of life. And may the memory of our loved ones inspire us to continue their work for the coming of Your kingdom."

Council rebukes judge

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Canadian Judicial Council has mildly rebuked the chief justice of the Federal Court for his conduct in a case involving three alleged Nazi war criminals.

Justice Julius Isaac's conduct was "inappropriate but not serious," a three-judge panel concluded in an eight-page decision released last week.

The finding, coupled with a report prepared for the Justice Department by former Ontario chief judge Charles Dubin, stands in marked contrast to a decision by Federal Court Judge Bud Cullen. Cullen stayed the cases involving the three alleged war criminals on the grounds of perceived interference in judicial independence.

The "interference" dates back to March 1, when Ted Thompson, assistant deputy attorney general, met with Isaac to discuss the slow pace of proceedings in the cases.

The Judicial Council found that in his capacity as administrator of the Federal Court and in light of an "institutional history of significant problems of delay in the court," Isaac "could not ignore the issue" of delay.

"The panel concluded there was nothing secretive or clandestine about [the] meeting with Thompson ... The meeting was held in good faith ... and without any intention to favor any party."

Commenting on the Judicial Council's finding, Canadian Jewish Congress spokesperson Bernie Farber said, "We've stated from the beginning that the decision by Cullen was an extreme overreaction.

"We continue to call upon the government of Canada to consider a reference of the appeal [of the three alleged war criminals] directly to the Supreme Court of Canada."

If not conscience, law

Swiss banks may finally be brought to account for the immorality of their practices. Last week, a small story appeared on the wire services reporting that a $20-billion (US) class action lawsuit has been filed in New York by Gizella Weisshaus on behalf of all survivors and victims who deposited money and valuables in Swiss banks for safekeeping until after World War II. The defendants in the action are Union Bank of Switzerland, the Swiss National Bank and a number of other institutions and individuals.

The lawsuit comes in the wake of many recent revelations and developments concerning Jewish property stolen by the Nazis. Last month the World Jewish Congress released documents describing how, after the war, American troops found caches of horded valuables containing every conceivable artifact of ritual and religious significance hidden in the salt mines in Merkers, Germany. Included in the property found was melted-down gold from the teeth of some of the victims. Indeed, the Jewish Week of New York recently reported that about two tons of gold are still being stored at the Federal Reserve Bank in New York.

Three weeks ago, the Swiss parliament was shamed into taking steps to establish an independent commission to investigate the fate of all the assets stolen by the Nazis and stashed in Switzerland. As Liki Nabholz, one of the sponsors of the Swiss legislation creating the commission, said, "The entire moral reputation of our country is at stake. The facts must not be suppressed but be laid, once and for all, on the table."

When they do come to light, as surely they will, those facts will likely reveal greed's ugliest, most horrific face. The World Jewish Congress estimates that Swiss banks, to this day, hold as much as $7 billion in assets and interest belonging to Jews murdered by the Nazis. The Swiss Commission is expected to get under way in April and will have unrestricted access to all records. What conscience could not do, perhaps the law will.

Shame on TVO

Last week, TVOntario (TVO) aired a program, called It's a boy, ostensibly a documentary, but actually an undisguised polemic on the subject of ritual circumcision. It was reviewed by The CJN (Oct. 10) and described, charitably, as "not entirely balanced."

On TVO's behalf one can say at least that there was no pretence at fairness or sensitivity or understanding or depth. The use of the term "barbaric" in connection with the rite was proof of that. But that is all one can say on behalf of TVO.

The Canadian Jewish Congress referred to the program as "unadulterated propaganda...anti-Jewish and anti-Muslim." The Simon Wiesenthal Centre for Holocaust Studies in Toronto pointed out that "it was totally inappropriate for an educational, government-financed station to launch an attack on one of the oldest and holiest of Jewish and Muslim religious practices."

In the Jewish world, and if we dare also to say, the Muslim world, circumcision is not subject to debate. It is not submitted to scientific scrutiny or medical opinion. It is not an elective procedure. It is, simply, done. It has been, simply, done for more than 3,500 years. And will be for at least another 3,500 years. Ritual circumcision is a sign, a proof, a commitment. Whoever rails against the practice – secularist, humanist, atheist – does so in vain. Throughout history, many have travelled in that circle, most of them intent on causing harm to the Jews. But as history has proven, they can no more discredit the brit milah, then they can the rainbow, another of God's mysterious, millennial signs.

First Yiddish will in Montreal

As a researcher and preserver of history, I discovered a short but intriguing paragraph while compiling a bibliography of early Canadian Hebraica. On a back page of the Montreal Gazette, dated Feb. 24 1916, appeared a concise story of the first Hebrew last will and testament ever probated in Montreal.

Azriel Wolofsky, junk dealer and relative of Kanader Adler publisher Hirsch Wolofsky, willed his worldly goods to his seven children: two parts each for the sons and one part each for the daughters. But before his wishes could be granted, the holograph will had to be translated for the court.

Rabbi Hirsch Cohen, grandfather of poet, composer and troubador Leonard Cohen, translated the will into English, and declared it to be an accurate translation. The declaration and signature were authenticated by Hirsch Wolofsky in his capacity as commissioner of the Superior Court.

The only inaccuracy in the Gazette story concerned the will's language — it was Yiddish, not Hebrew. Nevertheless, it was the first Yiddish will probated in Montreal.

Why this man loves Israel

I used to own a taxi and one day I took two Israeli businessmen to the airport. I couldn't help but overhear the discussion of the two men, which of course was in Hebrew. Even though I didn't understand the language, the force of energy that passed between them was unmistakable. It sounded like any minute my car was going to explode. I was totally flabbergasted at the energy of these two young men.

Each and every Israeli is a hero in my eyes, no matter what field he or she is involved in. When you are able to see banana trees, flowers and vegetables growing where a few short years ago there was nothing but sand and stone, it is a testament that our people have what it takes to create a modern miracle. Anyone who has a curious mind can see that miracles are still happening. The very fact that we have a homeland for our wandering people, makes me feel very humble and at the same time very proud.

Alexander Jakab

Minorities are potential allies for Quebecois

Tragically and shamefully cowed by the secessionists, Ottawa still fails to give meaningful, effective support to Quebec's anglophones and other minorities in their lonely struggles against the restrictive language laws. Small wonder that they feel neglected and abandoned by the present and previous federal governments. By its self-imposed impotence, its failure to seriously oppose the language laws for the past two decades, Ottawa has witlessly encouraged the secessionists.

Ottawa cannot afford to delay any further its duty to assure Quebecers that their rights as Canadians will be defended, particularly the right to remain Canadian, flag-waving is not enough. Ottawa must articulate clearly what it means to be a Canadian. it must define those Canadian rights and freedoms which it will defend against provincial encroachments.

Time will prove how counter-productive are the language restrictions. Freedom of expression for one language can not flourish at the expense of state-imposed restrictions on others. Realistically, however, the language debates are unlikely to be resolved until the Quebecois feel secure in their cultural identity, unthreatened by the dominant cultures of our continent. The minority communities are no threat to the Quebecois. On the contrary, they empathize with and support the desire of the Quebecois to promote and protect their linguistic and cultural identities, because that is exactly what they want for themselves. The course of history will be changed when the Quebecois come to recognize and appreciate the minorities as potential allies against the more urgent threats of U.S. cultural domination.

Synagogue in Mount Sinai hospital

The construction of a synagogue within the Sunnybrook Health Science Centre is a welcome addition to that institution. The new chapel will surely provide Jewish patients, veterans and staff with the spiritual comfort of regular services, availability of minyans and opportunity to observe yahrtzeit.

For the record, however, the Sunnybrook synagogue is not the first ever built in a hospital. Shortly after the competition of Mount Sinai Hospital at 600 University Ave., a beautiful synagogue was constructed in the northeast corner of the building on the University side. Donated by Faye and Joe Tanenbaum, it was consecrated on Oct. 26, 1975. Flanked by stained glass windows, the chapel seats 40 and contains a magnificent ark whose bronze doors were carved by sculptor Sorel Etrog. The synagogue continues to be used by Jewish patients, families and staff not only from Mount Sinai but from neighboring University Avenue hospitals as well.

Dreaming with your eyes open

By ALEX POMSON

What do people dream about? Unfulfilled wishes, difficulties at work, heartache and heartburn? Or perhaps things so strange it would take a team of dream analysts to interpret. Anecdotal evidence suggests that among those working in schools and other related educational institutions, it is common for professionals to dream about playing a major role in a new school – a school where they take charge or where things are established the way they want, where they open the school gates on the very first day for the first group of students to arrive at class.

It's not only teachers who fantasize in this way. If you offer most parents the chance, they will tell you what is wrong with their children's school, how it could be better and how, if only things were different, their school could be improved.

These are not even mysterious night-time hallucinations; they are widespread, socially-acceptable imaginings. Looked at cynically, one could argue that all of this confirms that there is no such thing as a perfect school, or that schools are subjected to a paralysing level of criticism, that there are few other public institutions which are subjected to so many calls for change. More positively, one might argue that these "dreams" point to a widespread sense, shared by parents and teachers, of what powerful instruments schools are, and of how much care should be taken in designing and developing them.

Over the last three decades, Jewish educators have been granted a number of opportunities to act out their fantasies – in the nicest sense of the word. For, despite a decline in the absolute number of young Jewish people receiving some form of Jewish education, there has been a phenomenal growth in the number of Jewish day schools in North America and in other parts of the world. Over 350 new day schools have opened in North America in the last 30 years.

This is especially remarkable when one considers the relative costliness of this form of schooling compared with what is still (in statistical terms) the majority route to Jewish education, via the Jewish supplementary system, usually in combination with free public schooling. In the greater Toronto area alone, three new day schools have opened in the last twelve months. In London, England, (a city with a declining Jewish population) the number of places for students in Jewish day schools has increased by more than 20 percent in the last 10 years.

Given that this phenomenon has been growing over the last 30 years or more, it has attracted a great deal of interest among those conducting research into Jewish education, in terms of its causes, consequences and potentialities. In fact, one of the foremost researchers into this phenomenon, Dr. Alvin Schiff, will be participating in the York University/UJA Federation continuity conference on Oct. 20.

Less widely reported or discussed, is the question of how one actually goes about creating a new school, not so much in terms of finance, organization or politics, but rather in terms of curriculum, that is, the range of planned educational experiences a school might provide, inside and outside the classroom. Who, for example, decides what a school's curriculum will look like? How do they decide? Does a group of people ever sit down with a blank piece of paper in order to map out what such a curriculum would look like and how it might be delivered? Does a curriculum evolve through negotiation between parents, boards and teachers? What tools do such schools use in order to judge how they are doing when they are still so new?

Answers to these questions might provide helpful information for all those involved in launching new schools of whatever denomination.

I must confess that over the last three years, I have been living in a fantasy world. Every day in that period I have set out for an educational wonderland where, as vice-principal, I was able to contribute to the nurturing of a completely new school. In fact, I must admit that I was even lucky enough to sit down with a blank piece of paper, in order to draw up, together with colleagues and collaborators, a picture of the kind of Jewish educational experience our new school might provide.

This was exciting for a number of reasons. Most of all, because the school, the King Solomon High School, was the first free Jewish high school (grades 7-13) to be established in one of the largest Jewish communities in Europe.

For those unfamiliar with Anglo-Jewry or with the delights of the English educational system, that last sentence might require some explanation. First, in north-east London, in the borough of Redbridge, there is a Jewish community of approximately 20,000 people who make up between eight and nine percent of the total local population. This makes it one of the largest Jewish communities in Europe. Secondly, in England, secondary education runs from Grade 7 through Grade 13. Thirdly, in England, denominational schools (whether Catholic, Jewish, Methodist or Protestant) are entitled to receive 90 percent of their capital funding and all of the funding for their non-religious education from the government, if they meet certain established criteria. This means that a high proportion of Jewish schools in England are free.

The King Solomon High School opened in September 1993 as a community school serving the Jews of Redbridge. It was organized with an Orthodox Jewish ethos, but welcomed students from every imaginable Jewish background. To that extent, it is probably best compared to the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto. Where it significantly differs from any Canadian equivalent, however, is in its cost to parents. Because it is a state-aided school, parents are entitled to make only a "voluntary" contribution towards their children's Jewish education. The maximum they pay is equivalent to $1,000 a year.

The school opened with 85 students in one grade. At the start of the 1996/7 academic year it had close to 650 students in six grades. When the school is fully grown it should contain approximately 1,000 students over seven grades.

How did this come about? In political terms, through a fortunate combination of luck and judgment; in communal terms, through a great deal of skilful lobbying; and in financial terms, through a great deal of generosity from a small number of far-sighted individuals, families and trusts.

Educationally, how was it possible to develop a curriculum which attracted parents and stimulated students? In retrospect, it seems that it was not ultimately the quality or the richness of our educational ideas that mattered most. More important than either curriculum theory or innovation was the quality of the school's personnel. Without individuals who wanted to contribute their own ideas and were unafraid of not knowing how things might turn out, and above all, who could build trusting relationships with students and colleagues, it is hard to see how the project could have succeeded.

This is an important point. For people often express dissatisfaction with schools in terms of programs, assessment policies or textbooks; however, we found that these things were secondary to the quality of teaching staff and the relationships they established with their students.

Rabbi and Talmid by Edouard Moyse

The teacher instructs his pupil, educating him, teaching him in a gentle, loving way.

King Solomon High was fortunate. The school's principal, Alastair Falk, is a talented and inspirational educator. His skill in identifying and appointing able personnel, as well as his confidence and capacity to encourage their development was/is at the bedrock of the school's success. Research into successful schools often works its way back to the central role of the principal and that was certainly the case here, where the school had no recent graduates or examination results for parents to view.

Indeed, at first the school possessed very few buildings for prospective students to inspect. A great deal, therefore, depended on the principal's being able orally to communicate his vision of his plan for the school and how he hoped it would develop.

What was it like starting from scratch in this way? Well, starting with a blank piece of paper was of course liberating, but it was also oppressive. We could do what we wanted, but we also recognised that we had no predecessors we could blame for whatever went wrong.

Furthermore, we soon became aware of a fascinating if paradoxical piece of research which suggested that new schools were among the more conservative educational institutions. It would seem that people who heavily invest in new ideas, structures or strategies will be among the most reluctant to change them. This served as an important warning, particularly as new colleagues joined the school with each year.

Above all, this was an opportunity to be creative. When nothing is fixed, you can manipulate everything: the length of lessons, the timing of the calendar, the relationship between different subjects in the curriculum, the content and context of lessons, the division of resources. It was possible to direct and develop a bewildering but powerful array of variables. It was possible, for example, to marshal an unusually diverse collection of resources and strategies in the construction of a b'nei mitzvah program. It meant, also, that students might prepare for Pesach through the collaboration of the limudei kodesh, music, technology, art and English departments. In schools with established curricula, constructing innovative programs of this sort almost always involves too much upheaval to be worthwhile.

Three years after the school opened, many questions remain unanswered. Most significant and most problematic are those questions relating to success. What, above all, was the school's impact on the community and on students? This is the kind of question to which everyone wants answers. What difference has full-time Jewish schooling made to the continuity and commitments of adolescent students?

One of the great attractions of the King Solomon project is that questions like these can be examined in what others have likened to laboratory conditions. Because so few young Jewish people in the area previously received Jewish secondary schooling, it might be possible to examine, with limited experimental interference, the scale and shape of the school's impact. It may take a few years to do so, but since my relationship with the school now primarily exists within this research dimension, I can at least look forward to a few more years of dreaming with my eyes open.

Prof. Alex Pomson was vice-principal and head of Jewish studies at King Solomon High School from 1993 to '96. He is now a professor in the Faculty of Education at York University.

The need to restore confidence

By Shira Herzog

These lines are written before the outcome of the current round of talks between Israelis and Palestinians at the Erez Junction. But it is already evident that the violent clashes of September 1996 will be remembered as a watershed in the Israeli-Palestinian relationship and in the life of the Netanyahu government. This is a snapshot in time of the Israeli mood in the aftermath of these trying and tragic events.

Something strange happened to Israeli public opinion as a result of the opening of the Hasmonean tunnel and the ensuing bloody confrontations in which Palestinian police fired at Israeli soldiers. Many who had not voted for Benjamin Netanyahu voiced serious concerns about the viability of the Oslo accords, while many who had voted for Netanyahu voiced concerns about the ability to deliver on his campaign promise of "peace with security."

These apparent contradictions were further illustrated in the polls, which showed 80 percent of Israelis committed to a continuation of the peace process, while 66 percent of Israelis believed that giving arms to the Palestinian police was a mistake. At the same time, polls also showed that 79 percent of Israelis were concerned about the situation, and over 50 percent were dissatisfied with Netanyahu's handling of it.

The great mystery for Israelis on the right and left remains the nature of Netanyahu's game plan. The committed right wants to believe that he is committed to freezing the process where it is. The committed left wants to believe that he will surprise them with a pragmatic approach to continuing the process. But neither side is sure. In the centre, there are hundreds of thousands of Israelis who did not want to choose between peace and security. They wanted both and Netanyahu promised both. They voted for him for that reason and as the polls show, they still want both. Netanyahu needs both the centre of the Israeli political map and the right, to ensure his political future. He cannot get re-elected by either group alone — and therein lies the difficulty. He can make promises to both, but once he starts to act, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to deliver to both.

As the story of the decisions leading to the opening of the tunnel became known, it became clear that the issue was less the "what" and more the "how" and "when." Even many of those who felt that the tunnel should be opened, including senior officials in the security service, had argued that it should be done as one step in a package deal with the Palestinians, so as to diminish their anticipated opposition. The questions that were raised after the fact had to do with the decision-making process in the Netanyahu government, specifically the exclusion of the senior military and security echelons from the final discussion on this.

As the details of the engagement with the Palestinian police became known, it became clear that this was one possibility that had unfortunately been overlooked in scenario-building exercises. And while it was a nightmare come true to see the firing power of the Palestinian force directed against soldiers with whom they had undertaken joint patrols only hours earlier, it also was clear that the existing fabric of cooperation had had tangible results. Indeed, in some cases, Palestinian police restrained the demonstrators and assisted in the rescue of Israeli casualties.

While many observers compared the events of the last few weeks to the intifadah of nearly a decade ago, the situation is different in several respects. First, as grudgingly as the recognition may be dawning on the new Israeli government, there is an acknowledgement of Arafat as their partner in a difficult, intricate and complex process. Second, for better or worse, Netanyahu is scrutinized by a world that is measuring him against four years in which Israel enjoyed the "dividends of peace," admittedly without a complete peace. He knows this, and therefore repeatedly stresses his commitment to the peace process, even as he emphasizes that his approach differs from that of his predecessors.

But Netanyahu is subject to a new pressure that didn't exist 10 years ago. Israel's economic prosperity of the last few years has been fuelled by significant foreign investment on the Tel Aviv stock exchange, directly into the economy. Israel now has partners from the international investment community who have a real stake in the outcome of political developments. These investors voted for peace with their money because of their perception that Israel was a stable country, negotiating for peace with its neighbors. In politics, perception is everything. Netanyahu, a master of the media game, knows this better than anyone. His statements in Washington and since his return indicate his understanding that this confidence must be restored at home and abroad.

Listening to Professor Said

By Morton Weinfeld

I recently had occasion to hear Columbia professor Edward Said speak at McGill University. The talk was part of Said's visit to McGill as a prestigious Cummings Lecturer. (When the Cummings family endowed the annual series, one presumes they did not have Said in mind.) The lecture I heard dealt specifically with the Middle East conflict, and was timely in that it took place only days after the eruption of violence between Israelis and Palestinians.

I knew that Said, a longtime militant defender of the Palestinian cause and opponent of the Oslo accords, would have little favorable to say about Israel. I had read his writings over the years. Still, I decided it would be interesting to hear him in person. And it was.

The room was packed with several hundred listeners, mainly students. My guess is that 95 percent of the audience was of Middle Eastern origin. It seemed to me that there were very few Jews, students or faculty.

Said is a polished speaker. His charisma for Arab audiences flows in part from his status as a highly recognized expert on western culture in an Ivy League university — even the enemy recognizes his talent. He has the biting intelligence and caustic wit of a stereotypical New York Jewish intellectual, except he is not Jewish. The crowd was solidly enthusiastic, as Said disparaged both Yasser Arafat and the Israelis with equal relish. I cannot know how typical this audience was of the Arabic or Palestinian academic diaspora. But if it is typical, Arafat's constituency is disappearing fast.

Said displayed the intellectual's contempt for the politician, who must on occasion practise the "art of the possible." He derided Arafat as an "African king," the kind of traitor who did the dirty work of the colonial master. While there is no denying Arafat's authoritarian rule — he has banned two of Said's books — Said's ridicule would be directed at any Palestinian leader who would accept an Oslo-like agreement.

Of course, the Oslo accords have not ushered in any golden age for Palestinians. Oslo is not the end of a process; it is designed to build mutual confidence over time. Palestinians and militants like Said may not wish to wait, but they have no choice. Fifty years elapsed from the first Zionist Congress to the founding of the Jewish State.

Said is an equal opportunity critic. He argued there is no essential difference between Labor and Likud. He described Benjamin Netanyahu as "gross," using the inflection of my teenage children. I found his demeaning comments about Yitzhak Rabin particularly distasteful. Said views life from a well-furnished New York apartment provided by Columbia University with all the trappings of an upper class American intellectual. Rabin views life through six feet of earth.

Said began his lecture by saying he had no solutions to offer. But by the end of his presentation, the echoes of that familiar if unrealistic refrain, a one-state solution (secular democratic state) could be heard clearly. To his younger listeners he urged engagement in building up the nascent Palestinian institutions — universities, hospitals, through a kind of Sherut La'am. He used the model of the building of Jewish institutions in the Yishuv, such as the Hebrew University. There was certainly no call to violence.

Said sees nothing worth emulating in dictatorial Arab states such as Syria or Iraq. He was scathing in his denunciation of the corruption of the Palestinian Authority and of the failure of mobilization among the Palestinian diaspora. If that part of his message leads to greater democratization of a future West Bank state, it ironically might serve the cause of peace. But the thrust of his rejectionist vision may breed cynicism and despair, from which little that is constructive will flow.

The disputed Jerusalem tunnel

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

The Temple Mount tunnel was unquestionably the spark that ignited the recent violence in Israel. It is, therefore, worthwhile to look at this archeological dig in some detail. When was it originally built and where precisely is it located?

The tunnel dates from ancient times and goes back to the period of the Hasmoneans, more than 2,000 years ago. It served as an aqueduct and was part of a large draining system that became covered by the debris of two millenia. In the 19th century, its existence was discovered by Charles Wilson and Konrad Schick, but the tunnel remained buried until 1987, full of mud and water.

I remember when it was being excavated. The archeologist in charge was Dan Bahat and that particular part of the tunnel system measures about 80 metres in length, seven metres in height and has a width of a little more than one metre. When it was first made accessible to the public, my wife and I descended into it and saw the huge boulders forming the foundation of the Western Wall. It was difficult to move around, however, since in that narrow space, people were both coming and going.

Many of the readers of this column will be familiar with the Western Wall (Kotel Hama'arivi). Picture yourself as standing before the Wall, facing it as if in prayer. When you look to the left, you will find buildings that border the Western Wall Plaza, and the entrance to the tunnel (as we saw it years ago) is right there. The tunnel thus does not run under the Temple Mount, but its western side goes all the way to the Via Dolorosa, thus opening into the Muslim Quarter. It was anticipated that many visitors would traverse the tunnel and either enter into it from the Muslim Quarter or exit there, creating new opportunities for commerce.

It is important to realize that the tunnel never ran, nor does it run today, under the Temple Mount; it runs alongside it, and for the last 1,000 years, it has not endangered the physical security of the Mount and the mosques erected upon it. Putting out the news that the tunnel might lead to the destruction of Muslim holy sites was a surefire means of inciting the religious fervor of Muslims.

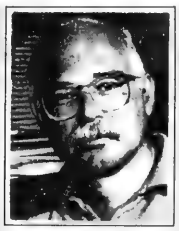
The struggle over the project is therefore a symbolic one: Jews consider it as just another historic site which interferes with nothing else, while Muslims perceive it as touching upon their own sacred locale and, therefore, an intrusion into their religious privileges. More, they perceived the Israeli government as asserting the Jewishness of the whole city, and this implication was clearly and quickly understood by the Arabs.

The real issue is, therefore, the tension surrounding the peace process, and the tunnel was the spark that ignited the blaze. I believe that Israel had the right to proceed with opening the tunnel, but the question is whether it was the right time to do it. In retrospect it is obvious that, in a highly charged atmosphere, it was not. It handed Arafat a perfect pretext to orchestrate a network of violence.

The Kirshner File

Both sides violate Oslo accords

Israel and the PLO have signed two interim agreements since May 1994 which set out the powers, responsibilities and obligations of both sides.



By Sheldon Kirshner

It is disheartening but not surprising that there have been violations — Palestinian and Israeli — of the Oslo accords. Prone to differing interpretations, and subject to circumstances on the ground, the complex pacts are vulnerable to manipulation and procrastination by the respective parties.

The previous Israeli government, led by Yitzhak Rabin and Shimon Peres, called the PLO to account in instances of grave noncompliance, but overlooked minor infringements.

The new Israeli government, whose mantra is "reciprocity" and whose slogan is "peace with security," has been more stringent with respect to demanding full compliance. Benjamin Netanyahu, the prime minister, has said that each side must comply equally. And if Palestinian abuses continue, he has warned, he will not proceed to final-status negotiations.

Dore Gold, Netanyahu's foreign affairs advisor, claims that Palestinian violations "could fill an encyclopedia."

Recently, the Tel Aviv daily Ha'aretz published a government research paper which cites about 20 examples of Palestinian noncompliance, ranging from the serious to the mundane.

In contravention of the accords, the Palestine Authority (PA), headed by PLO leader Yasser Arafat, is building an airport in the Gaza Strip. The PA has also failed to inform Israel of bills passed by the its legislative assembly and has allowed Palestinian visitors in the autonomous areas to stay longer than permitted.

In addition, the PA has been oblivious to the counterfeiting of Israeli products in the West Bank and its agents have abducted Palestinians in places under Israel's control.

But in Israel's view, the most egregious violations turn on incitement, terrorism, the PLO national covenant and East Jerusalem.

Most recently, Israel accused Arafat of unleashing his police force against Israeli soldiers in the gravest fighting in the territories since the Six Day War. There is no tangible evidence that the PA issued clear-cut orders to its policemen to fire on Israeli troops. But non-violence remains a cardinal canon of the peace process.

Defying the letter and the spirit of Oslo, Arafat and his associates have expressed support for holy war, described Hamas terrorists as "heroes" and "martyrs," and characterized Israel as "the main enemy."

Be that as it may, the PA has refrained from terrorism, condemned terrorism, prevented a number of terrorist acts, cooperated with Israel in the battle against terror and arrested Palestinians identified as terrorists. But contrary to a promise he made after last winter's series of suicide bombings in Israel which claimed the lives of 59 people, Arafat has not banned the military wings of Hamas and Islamic Jihad.

The PA is obligated to extradite wanted terrorists, but its record is not encouraging. So far, the PA has ignored 10 of 14 requests submitted by Israel and refused four.

Last summer, the Palestine National Council amended the PLO's covenant, removing references to Israel's destruction and armed struggle. The Israeli government of the day, as well as the United States, praised Arafat. The present Israeli government, however, is skeptical that the objectionable clauses in the charter have indeed been abrogated. And it is reserving judgment with regard to the new covenant, which should be ready soon.

The accords ban political activity on the part of the PA in Jerusalem. Nevertheless, the PA — which claims East Jerusalem as the capital of a future Palestinian state — has engaged in such activities, prompting tension between Israel and the Palestinians.

There have been a number of Israeli violations.

By rights, Israel should have deployed from Hebron six months ago. Peres postponed the planned deployment twice, after the suicide bombings last February and March and on the eve of last May's general election.

Netanyahu claims that he is committed to deployment, but demands modifications and has resisted all pressure by the PA, the Arab states and the United States to tie himself down to concrete deadlines.

Netanyahu has grown more adamant since Joseph's Tomb in Nablus was stormed by Palestinian police and civilians last month, resulting in the deaths of six Israeli soldiers. Netanyahu now demands greater security guarantees for the 450 Jewish settlers in Hebron.

The PA considers the expansion of Jewish settlements in the territories as a flagrant transgression of the accords. Article 31 of the second Oslo agreement states: "Neither side shall initiate or take any step that will change the status of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip pending the outcome of the permanent status negotiations" (which have yet to begin in earnest).

Israel claims that the expansion of settlements does not change the legal status per se of the territories.

Covenant controversy

The PA contends that Israel's objective is to turn the territories into a patchwork of non-contiguous Palestinian cantons and thus block the formation of an independent Palestinian state. Netanyahu has made no secret of his unalterable opposition to such an entity. (By contrast, the Labor party seemed resigned to a demilitarized Palestinian state in the greater part of Gaza and the West Bank).

For reasons which it has yet to clarify, Israel has not implemented a clause in the accords permitting the Palestinians "safe passage" from Gaza to the West Bank.

Israel's military siege of the territories, triggered by the suicide bombings last winter, is also a problem.

The closure, the PA says, contradicts articles in the accords which call for the unrestricted movement of industrial goods and agricultural produce between Israel and the territories and prohibit collective punishment against the Palestinians.

Israel's rationale is that it is responsible for overall security and is therefore duty-bound to keep terrorism in check.

Contrary to the accords, Israel has not released more Palestinian prisoners. And in the judgment of the PA, Israel has further violated the agreements by having confiscated Palestinian land. Israel counters that the expropriations are connected with the construction of bypass roads, which are mentioned in the agreements.

Two important items of unfinished business loom large as well.

By the terms of the accords, Israel is obliged to make additional withdrawals from the West Bank in the coming months and to negotiate Jerusalem's final status.

These are problematic questions. The Israeli government has yet to address the issue of further withdrawals, and Netanyahu has declared that Jerusalem "is out of the package."

In conclusion, both sides are required to refrain from unilateral actions which contravene the Oslo accords. But neither the PA nor Israel has lived up to this solemn undertaking.

Differences divide us

By RABBI DANIEL KOMITO GOTTLIEB

This week we read about the Tower of Babel. "All the earth had the same language and the same words ... And they said, "Come, let us build us a city, and a tower with its top in the sky, to make a name for ourselves; else we shall be scattered all over the world." (Gen. 11:1-4)

And then, the response of the Holy Blessed One: "If, as one people with one language for all, this is how they have begun to act, then nothing that they may propose to do will be out of their reach. Let us, then, go down and confound their speech there, so that they shall not understand one another's speech." (Gen. 11:6-7)

One can only wonder what the problem might have been. For on the surface, it appears that all was going well. The people, working in harmony with one another, set about to build their tower, and their ability to communicate with one another and cooperate with one another led to the success of their endeavor. And yet God responded by "confounding their speech" and "scattering them over the face of the whole earth." (Gen. 11:9)

Midrash suggests that God was unhappy with their motivation — that they had set out to make a name for themselves — and that perhaps they had lost their perspective as they applied their combined talents and energies in mastering the technologies of their day — building a city and a tower with its top in the sky.

One only needs to consider the questions currently surrounding genetic engineering, nuclear and chemical weapons, experimental drug treatments, synthetic fertilizers and the like, to realize the potential excesses of a world in which nothing we propose to do would be out of our reach.

And so humanity is scattered, and challenged by differences in language and culture, values and objectives.

Even more significant for us is the reality that we, in our families and among our loved ones, often seem distanced from one another, and separated by barriers of language and common pursuit.

And in the Jewish world, we are also scattered and challenged by many differences. We have seen in our global Jewish community, in Israel and in our local community, how differences among us can, at times, create barriers that make communication and cooperation more difficult. And on occasion, deep divisions have had a tragic impact upon us.

So let us begin to learn each other's languages, open our hearts and minds to the thoughts and words of others. Let us begin to seek an understanding of individual differences among our loved ones, discover a new respect for the sincere commitments of our neighbors and celebrate diversity within our community.

We need not return to a time when all have the same language and the same words. Indeed, it appears that this is not God's will for us. But neither must we continue to be confounded and divided by our differences so that our speech becomes unintelligible to one another.

Commentary a delight

The Haftorah Commentary, by W. Gunther Plaut. Translated by Chaim Stern (U.A.H.C. Press, $55.95).

It should be said at the outset that this is a superb work of scholarship that fills a longtime need. It is the first translation and commentary in English to deal with the complete cycle of the 85 prophetic sections (haftorot) chanted in the synagogue during the Sabbath and holiday morning services. Most people are familiar with the haftorah as the centrepiece of the bar or bat mitzvah ceremony.

The translation into modern English by Rabbi Chaim Stern is clear, precise and gender neutral. Rabbi Plaut's commentary draws on the insights of traditional interpreters of the text as well as from the latest findings in archeology, history and linguistics.

Additional helpful features of the book by Rabbi Plaut include biographical sketches of the various prophets, page-long essays on religious, social, moral and ethical issues raised by the particular texts, as well as sections called "Gleanings" which adduce pertinent comments and nuggets of wisdom from the midrash and modern sources.

The essays deal with an astonishing array of subjects: Elisha's miracles, the Holy City, divorce as a metaphor, biblical poetry, friendship, the meaning of the vision and so forth.

Rabbi Plaut explains that the commentary is necessary because "I estimate that, until now, 75 to 80 percent of the haftorah readings were incomprehensible and held little or no meaning for most Jews, as the complete texts were only available in Hebrew and limited translations."

Since some of the haftorot are difficult to understand even with commentary, or are irrelevant to the Torah portions, the Rabbi has added 50 suggested additional readings drawn from both the prophetic books and from the Writings, the third segment of the Torah. These include selections from Psalms, Job and Proverbs.

The word haftorah means "ending" or "termination." It refers to the selection from the Former or Latter Prophets which follow the reading of the Torah portion. Just when this practice arose is uncertain. Some scholars suggest that in the days of the Maccabees (second century BCE), the Syrians issued a decree that prohibited the public reading of the Torah. To circumvent this edict, the reading of the haftorah was instituted.

In the days of the Mishnah, the haftorah readings for the festivals were fixed. The readings for the Sabbaths, however, were not determined until the early medieval period. Evidently, until then, they were chosen by either the head of the synagogue or by the individual readers.

The criterion for the choice of a particular haftorah was its appropriateness as a follow-up to the reading from the Torah. A common or similar theme was sought. Thus the Torah reading that contains the Song of Moses has as its haftorah a prophetic selection that contains the Song of Deborah. The episode in Numbers describing the incident of the twelve spies sent by Moses is paralleled by the passage in Joshua concerning the spies dispatched by him to search out the land. The Book of Jonah was chosen for Yom Kippur because it deals with forgiveness. The haftorah for the Sabbath that deals with the theophany on Mount Sinai is Isaiah's vision in the Holy Temple described in Isaiah, Chapter Six.

For about a third of the haftorot, however, this criterion is abandoned and the choice is determined either by the calendar or by events in Jewish history.

Although this volume contains over 900 pages, it is admirably designed: sturdily bound, easy to handle and with large, clear type.

This landmark work will be welcomed by all Jews seeking increased enlightenment about an important portion of the Hebrew Bible. It deserves widespread use and study and belongs in every Jewish home as a companion volume to Rabbi Plaut's The Torah: A Modern Commentary published in 1981, which has sold over 300,000 copies.

Jewish Life

Travelling in the paths of Spanish-Portuguese ancestors

By RUTH RAIZELL FRANKEL-GRANER

Guest Voices

Recently, I returned from a Jewish historical tour of Holland and England led by Prof. Yom Tov Assis of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. When I am asked, "What was the highlight?" I find myself saying, "Everything!" But in fact, there is one day which stands out from all the others.

July 9, 1996 — Early morning in Holland. Slightly overcast. We have been travelling down the Amstel River for almost an hour. Kneeling sideways on the floor of our large river boat, one of the younger women takes out her flute and plays Yerushalayim shel zahav (Jerusalem of gold). There is not another boat to be seen and the gentle sound travels unimpeded across the waveless, grey water. The shore, too, except for a few cars, is all but deserted. Only occasionally does a windmill or house appear, and once, a woman on a bicycle.

Our destination this morning is the ancient cemetery at Ouderkerk, the Beth Haim. For three days, we have been travelling — by bus, train, plane and on foot — in the paths of our Spanish-Portuguese ancestors, who, driven from Spain, deceived in Portugal, forcibly converted, and in every hideous way deprived of their right to exist as Jews, had found a new home here, in the Netherlands.

In 1614, on the "threshold of a golden century," the Jewish community was permitted to purchase a piece of land for burial purposes, far beyond the city of Amsterdam.

This is the point we have almost reached — where the Amstel River meets the Holendrecht.

One of the men in the group of 32 people finds his flute. Another song, If I Forget Thee Oh Jerusalem, propels us forward and "New Jerusalem," as Amsterdam was known 400 years ago, grows farther away.

If you listen, within the full and measured notes of the flute, you can almost hear the solemn rustle of the heavier garments worn by those who travelled this route centuries ago, not in respectful wonder as we do, but as they would have done, mourning and in sorrow. Beth Haim was and is still a place where community members could be remembered, grieved for and honored.

We disembark at the place where the two rivers meet. On the street across from our procession, a man and a woman, each with a separate easel, are sketching the Ouderkerk, the building constructed at this confluence. It is, I suppose, far more impressive to those who are unaware or unconcerned, than the field of uncut grass towards which we are heading. (Our ancestors would have had a more direct route, for much later, we come across the iron gates which lead directly to the water's edge. It takes only a little imagination to see solemn figures from the past landing, shifting ponderous burdens ready for burial.)

As we move into the green field, a few white marble tombs emerge, flung — the headstones of Sephardim lie horizontally on the ground — across what appear to be an acre or two at the most. There are, in fact, over 30,000 people buried here. The cemetery, in use right up to the present, is much larger than it appears.

The rabbi who will act as our guide greets us, enthusiastic about his work — the preservation, expansion and exposition of centuries of tradition. He carries with him a small scrubbing brush and a basin of water to wash away the debris which conceals or obscures the inscriptions on the tombs.

We stop at the gravestone of the mother of Baruch Spinoza, and further on, at that of his father. As for Spinoza himself, I lingered to take photographs of these markers without the backs or feet of the group members and missed the reference to his final resting place!

Several metres from us, a small group of hired workers struggle to maintain the cemetery, which is slowly sinking into the marshy ground. Several of the tombstones have been resettled and cleaned. They are of thick, white marble, deeply carved with distinctly non-halachic images. Death appears frequently as a skeleton, sometimes wielding an enormous scythe. Skulls with large black and hollow eyes, cherubs and angels, although generally not seen in Jewish cemeteries, are common here.

Nevertheless these gravestones demonstrate the sincere desire of a people who, after five generations of existence as Christians, were struggling to return to Judaism.

Inscriptions on the stones are written in Ladino — a Judeo-Spanish language — and in Hebrew. There are biblical scenes, and names such as Benjamin, Rivka, Moses, Mordechai, Jacob, Judah, Abraham and Isaac.

Quite often a scene has been carved which links the name of the deceased with a biblical event. The gravestone of Moses de Mordechai, for example, shows the biblical Mordechai astride a horse, being honored as in the Purim tale.

Dates on some tombstones read: 5427, 5460, 5463, 5509. In a few months we will welcome the year 5757!

Most of the group on this tour are former Americans, now permanent residents of Israel. In addition, we have with us at least three survivors of the Holocaust.

One of them was a child here in Holland. With her presence, and that of the other survivors, the many residents of Israel — whether sabra or those who have made aliyah — the Americans, Britons and Canadians, the ancient biblical scenes and the Hebrew letters and Ladino inscriptions on the tombstones, the click of each state-of-the art camera or whir of a camcorder, the newest songs about Jerusalem as well as some of the oldest, we stand in the morning sunlight in what is truly a Beth Haim — a house of life — merged in the endless interweaving of time and history, each element a part of the glorious tapestry of our Judaism.

"SHALOM" "PEACE"

An original ink painting by Julie Staller-Pentelik, uses a watercolor technique to infuse the richness of Jewish tradition with an imaginative contemporary style. It is one of seven works by the talented Baltimore-based artist to appear in the new Art Calendar published by Women of Reform Judaism for the Jewish year 5757.

Four men find market for Jewish humor

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Do you know a good Jewish joke?

Four Toronto men sure do and they are riding the crest of a boom in Jewish humor, one that attracted 700 people to Beth Tikvah Synagogue recently.

The four comics are Alf Kwinter, a lawyer, Jackie Gelman, a commercial paper salesman, Jack Markle, co-owner of a Markham sign company, and Norman Gilbert, a life insurance agent.

Gelman, whose parents ran a grocery store in Kensington Market, says he is "glatt kosher" because he tells his stories in Yiddish and the others are only kosher-style. Kwinter, who, like the others, does his bit as a volunteer for charity, says he is not sure where one of his careers starts and the other finishes. "A judge often says to me, 'Mr. Kwinter you must be joking.' "

Markle, born and raised in Winnipeg, says he started telling jokes to overcome shyness. He likes the one about the forgetful elderly Jewish man who approached somebody at a wedding reception and asked "Was it you or your brother who died?"

Gilbert likes to tell dialect stories and he can spin them out. His best jokes are gathered when he and Markle are working out on a treadmill at the Fitness Institute, talking to other members. Sometimes he hears good ones in the steam room, not always repeatable.

The four comics are a palpable hit. (They're available, even for out of town, for charity events, 416-441-1273.) They're appearing Oct. 19 at Beth Torah, where Nathan Naymark is being honored, Adath Israel on Nov. 24, and a return visit to Beth Tikvah, Dec. 12. Kwinter talked at Temple Emmanu-el Men's Club on Jewish humor.

They had their first big hit at Beth Sholom when three of them entertained 300. Later Gilbert joined the group at Markle's invitation.

It's probably giving away a secret but they all have index cards categorizing types of jokes. But the need for new material is so great they also make up their own. "I've heard every Jewish joke, bar none," says Gilbert.

Markle admits that in preparation for a night at a synagogue he'll go over his collection of jokes about cantors and rabbis. One of his favorites is about the priest and rabbi who entered the pearly gates at the same time. The priest got a Chevrolet and the rabbi a Cadillac to drive around heaven. Pointing to the rabbi, St. Peter said, "He's mishpachah."

Kwinter likes jokes in both Yiddish and English while Gelman, a master at Yiddish storytelling, says certain jokes which sound vulgar in English don't when told in Yiddish. The boom in Jewish humor he ascribes to the desire of Jewish people to "come home again" and the end of an era when it was embarrassing to admit to being Jewish.

Settlers not extremists, says Yesha leader

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

Benny Kashriel

TORONTO — Jewish settlers in the Gaza Strip, Judea and Samaria may take a hard line, but they are "not the extremists depicted in the media," says Benny Kashriel, mayor of Ma'aleh Adumim and deputy chair of Yesha, the umbrella organization for local and regional councils of the aforementioned areas outside of Israel's Green Line.

A longtime Likud party member, Kashriel, 45, spent two days in Toronto to speak at the offices of B'nai Brith Canada (BBC) and Canadian Jewish Congress and meet with local community leaders to lay the groundwork for a group of Ma'aleh Adumim supporters here. His trip also included stops in Los Angeles and New York.

Kashriel has been urging Israelis and Diaspora Jews alike to stand behind Benjamin Netanyahu. Condemnation of the hardline Israeli prime minister only serves to weaken the Israeli government, Kashriel believes. "When we are divided, we don't have any chance to withstand the challenges that our enemies or anyone will give us."

The mayor believes that with a united populace in Israel, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat will realize he has no choice but to compromise and reach a peace agreement.

Kashriel, a native of Ashkelon, and his American-born wife Rhonda have lived in Ma'aleh Adumim, just five miles east of Jerusalem, for 14 years. The town was established in 1975 under the auspices of Yitzhak Rabin, Israel's then prime minister.

Kashriel emphasized that Ma'aleh Adumim was built on government land. "No Arab land was taken. No Arab family was evacuated," he said.

Three years ago, Ma'aleh Adumim was named the most beautiful city in Israel. "For young couples, it's the best place to raise their children," said Kashriel.

A $4.5 million (US) library, which Kashriel hopes will become an international Jewish resource, is under construction, and plans are in the works for a new hotel complex. The city's industrial zone houses 100 factories. "A strong Ma'aleh Adumim will make Jerusalem ten times stronger," he said, referring to Judea and Samaria as the "east security belt of Jerusalem."

The father of three, former director-general of Afridar construction and development company, left the business world when he became mayor in 1992, following a stint as deputy mayor.

He would like to see Ma'aleh Adumim and other Jewish towns outside the Green Line become "a legal part of Israel."

Prior to the intifadah, said Kashriel in an interview, the inhabitants of his town — 80 percent of whom he describes as "right-wing but not extreme," 17 percent of whom are English-speaking immigrants and only 20 percent of whom are religious — had a good relationship with their Arab neighbors.

"We went to Jericho restaurants [seven miles away] and talked with local Arabs. We went shopping there and they came shopping in Ma'aleh Adumim." Jewish settlers no longer go to Arab towns, said Kashriel. "It's dangerous for us."

The Arabs continue to shop in Ma'aleh Adumim, however, and the town — Yesha's only settlement to have achieved the status of a city, with 21,000 inhabitants and growing quickly — provides employment to 1,000 Jericho Palestinians, Kashriel told an audience of some 50 people at a BBC luncheon.

Some 1,000 Jerusalemites also commute to Ma'aleh Adumim to work in its industrial park, he added.

On an informal basis — "over a cup of coffee, not officially" — Arabs from a nearby town have expressed a desire to be part of Israel rather than a Palestinian state, Kashriel claimed.

New Jewish show promotes culture, tradition

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Television watchers may have noticed a new Jewish show on Vision TV. Canadian Jewish Focus, a 30-minute mix of news, interviews and features, premiered Sept. 8 in the Sunday, 4 p.m. slot.

Hosted by Shimon Zer-Aviv and veteran Toronto radio personality Marsha Lederman, the show covers local events, news from Israel, interviews and personality profiles.

There's also plenty of Hebrew spoken (by Zer-Aviv), with English subtitles.

The show is meant to fill a void in ethnic and religious Canadian TV programming by promoting Jewish culture and tradition, assistant producer Barbara Goldman-Sarfati told The CJN.

The hosts take the viewer on remote locations as well as use a set. Segments focus on holiday observance and ceremonies, food preparation, community news, music, dining, travel and panel discussions. Visiting Israeli dignitaries are interviewed.

It's produced independently of Vision, and sponsors are welcome.

"We're pleased something is happening in the Jewish community," said Vision executive producer Richard Landau. "Part of our job is to represent all faiths, so we're delighted with the show."

The program reaches a potential audience of 125,000.

Canadian Jewish Focus airs in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia Sundays at 4 p.m.; at 3 p.m. in Manitoba, and at 5 p.m. in Atlantic Canada and Alberta.

The show is the third stab at Jewish TV programming in the past year, two of them now out of the picture. An earlier attempt, Jewish Magazine — a pilot of which aired on Vision last March — has fizzled.

That program showed promise, with its hosts, author Morley Torgov and Toronto Star columnist Elie Tesher, and a professional production team. But it encountered financial difficulties, and there are no plans for instalments in the foreseeable future.

The show is being "retooled," said Janice Maser, one of the producers, with the possibility of different hosts and a new production staff. Although there was plenty of community interest, there were problems with sponsorship and funding, Maser said.

According to Landau, "the community support [the show sought] didn't materialize."

Maser says there's still room for a Canadian-Jewish TV show that has broad appeal and is entertaining and relevant. No date has been set for Jewish Magazine's renewal.

There a Catch-22 when it comes to getting a Jewish TV show off the ground, she pointed out. Networks want a high-quality product with financial backing, but sponsors are reluctant to get involved without a commitment that the show will actually be broadcast.

Meantime, Jewish Journal, which broadcast six episodes on Metro Toronto's Rogers Cable TV last spring, has been discontinued.

The CJN had a segment on the show, with reporter Frances Kraft summarizing the previous week's news.

Producer Doris Epstein said it's being canned because Rogers has restructured its multicultural programming, meaning Jewish Journal would have been cut back to just 12 episodes a year, "and that's not enough to build a viewing audience."

Community Matters

Sephardic culture rediscovered

UJA Federation's Action Committee for Jewish Continuity has awarded $170,000 in its second round of grants for continuity projects. The following four page Community Matters supplement, prepared by Adi Neuberger, profiles the 16 grant recipients and how they will benefit the community.

A Sephardic learning centre is inviting young adults and newly married couples to embark on a journey of Sephardic self-discovery. "We want to spark enthusiasm for learning about our heritage," says Jack Buzaglo, a volunteer with Medrash Torah Vehayim, who is working on attracting more young people to the Institute's learning sessions. "People of Sephardic background," he adds, "have the opportunity to understand, for example, why brides take part in the Henna ritual before the wedding ceremony and why Sephardim, unlike Ashkenazim, eat rice and legumes on Passover." Learning about the meanings of different customs and rituals in the Sephardic tradition, adds Buzaglo, "can be a catalyst for their own personal growth."

The Institute, which recently received a Jewish continuity grant from UJA Federation, offers both Jews of Sephardic and Ashkenazi background evening classes in Gemara, philosophy, women's studies and Lifecycles. The Lifecycles course, which explores Sephardic traditions and customs from birth to death, has become increasingly popular among young adults, according to Medrash volunteer Mercedes Bendayan. "Lifecycles deals with modern aspects of everyday life and which can be an entry into a deeper understanding of Sephardic heritage."

"Many people are aware of the ancient customs," observes Rabbi Amram Assayag, "but few understand the reasons behind them."

UJA Federation grant expands family education

Jewish education is becoming a family affair thanks to a new program for parents and their children.

The Mishpacha Educators Training Institute, sponsored by the Board of Jewish Education and the Supplementary Schools Principals Council, will train Jewish educators to teach families about Jewish laws and customs.

"Parents today want to learn along with their children in order to enrich their home life," says Karen Goodis, one of the project coordinators. "The role of the Institute is to develop interesting programs for parents and kids."

The first training session for teachers will begin in January with an outside facilitator who specializes in multi-generational education. Five Sunday afternoon sessions will follow from February to June.

Once training has been completed, each participating school will implement its own Jewish family education program.

"It's a great chance for parents to have a hands-on experience with their children and assume the role of Jewish educators," explains Dr. Ira Schweitzer, Director of Education for Temple Sinai.

Bar and bat mitzvas with a special touch

The Beth Israel Hebrew Academy is helping hundreds of young adults make the most of their bar mitzva and bat mitzva experience.

The school's Bar and Bat Mitzva Sheli program offers students classes in prayer, Jewish laws, Israel and Hebrew language, in addition to the Torah and Haftorah portions they must learn before the big day.

"It's an extension of their bar and bat mitzva," explains Lillian Benlolo, Director of the Academy. "By studying more than just their required portions, the students gain a deeper understanding and get more out of the whole experience."

Another innovative aspect of the program, according to Benlolo, is how it brings Jews in Thornhill and Richmond Hill closer together. "Our unique approach and personal touch makes us like a small family here."

Benlolo's efforts at building community, assisted by a UJA Federation continuity grant, also extend to helping families find synagogues for bar and bat mitzva celebrations.

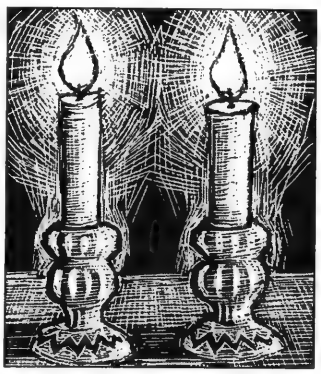
For the love of Shabbat

A love of Shabbat is uniting a small group of Jews from different beliefs and backgrounds.

They meet once a month on Friday evenings, light Shabbat candles and recite kiddush before discussing the Torah portion of the week and other selected readings.

"We compress a whole day of Shabbat into two hours," explains Allan Shiff, who founded Yedidai Shabbat (Friends of Shabbat) just over two years ago. "Traditional readings provide an important connection to the past and to the rest of world Jewry."



Aside from meeting to study Torah and share Shabbat, the group gets together to feel more involved with the Jewish community.

"Most of us don't belong to a synagogue," says Shiff, "so Yedidai Shabbat helps us feel like we belong."

The continuity grant from UJA Federation will help Friends of Shabbat to expand its membership.

Community Matters

Storytelling enriches Jewish life

The art of Jewish storytelling is enjoying a revival, with the help of a UJA Federation continuity grant. But the real story is the role tales play in encouraging a renewed appreciation of Jewish culture.

Jewish Storytelling Arts, a non-profit organization that performs puppet shows and conducts storytelling sessions, symbolizes this surge of interest.

"People learn best from stories," says Leslie Robbins, one of the organization's co-founders, "and Jews have a tremendous heritage from which to draw interesting stories."

The group, which also participates in the annual Toronto Jewish Storytelling Festival, is well known for its use of Sholem Aleichem's Yiddish writings and I.B. Singer's folktales. Life-like puppets appeal to both adults and children in hospitals, schools and synagogues.

"Jews are intimately connected with stories," explains Robbins, "and stories connect us with our values."

Bridging generation gap

A Toronto youth organization is using modern media to build bridges between generations and help families explore Jewish values.

The National Council of Synagogue Youth's (NCSY) L'Dor V'Dor (Generation to Generation) program is showing excerpts from contemporary TV shows such as ER, Seinfeld and All in the Family, to trigger discussion between parents and children about contemporary topics.

Following the professionally moderated discussion, everyone will join together to relate the topics to classical Jewish readings.

"It's a fantastic opportunity to talk about Jewish values," explains Glenn Black, Director of NCSY, Canada Region. "We're taking this very important exercise to peoples' living rooms, the heart of the Jewish home, so that everyone will feel at ease."

Black says TV was chosen as the communications tool because "it's a favorite pastime of teenagers and a good way to communicate Jewish thoughts."

"You would be surprised how little most parents know about the values their own children hold."

Song and dance teach kids about community

Children of all ages and backgrounds are singing and dancing their way to a closer relationship with Israel.

They belong to a program called Kids Sing Israel, which meets on Sundays to explore Jewish life through the universal language of music.

"Children love music," explains program coordinator, Adela Gertner, "so it's only natural that we use it to teach them about their heritage."

In addition to song and dance, the kids, from toddlers to age 12, learn about the holidays and Israel by organizing a mock seder, visiting a matza factory during Pesach, planting trees on Tu-Bishvat and participating in other community events such as the UJA Federation Community March for Israel.

Gertner hopes to increase her group of youngsters with the help of a grant from UJA Federation, because she is convinced "music is the thread that connects everyone."

Kids Sing Israel members were proud participants in the 1996 Community March for Israel.

Calling all volunteers

Norman Beck shakes the lulav and etrog on Sukkot with the help of Sol Fleising, Director of Finance at Reena.

Reena and Yachad, an arm of NCSY (National Council of Synagogue Youth), are joining forces at the grass roots level to find young adults interested in becoming involved with Jewish programming for developmentally handicapped clients.

According to Arlene Margolis, what makes this intiative so unique is that volunteers will benefit as much as those whom they are helping. "Sometimes," she says, "by offering to help, you gain more than you give."

Margolis, a volunteer coordinator for Reena, plans to go out to universities, high schools and social groups to identify volunteers who not only want to work with people who have developmental handicaps, but also want to explore their Jewish roots. "We hope this will be an education for the entire community in Judaism and helping one another."

Margolis would like to see the expansion of holiday programming such as a Shavuot learn-a-thon at Shaarei Tefilla Synagogue and a Tu-Bishvat barbecue.

Grant provides comfort for converts

The Conservative movement is offering a warm welcome and a helping hand to the newest members of the Jewish community.

The Rabbinical Assembly is beginning its new Outreach to Jews by Choice project in order to encourage converts to become involved with Jewish communal life and reinforce their Jewishness.

"These people, who have made a very strong commitment to Judaism, can greatly enhance our community," says Rabbi Irvin Beigel, program coordinator. "It's also a way to offer them the practical advice and suppport they need."

Claudette Edgehill, who completed her conversion last August, is looking forward to becoming a mentor within the outreach project. "It will be great to be more exposed to the Jewish community and to help other converts find their way, especially during the holidays."

Other outreach features include shabbatons and study sessions.

"Ongoing study," says Beigel, "will help converts maintain their commitments and enhance their Jewish experience."

Families facing east receive support

Jews in Durham region, east of Metro Toronto, won't feel as isolated, thanks to a new family outreach program.

Jewish Families of Durham was created a year ago to find ways of bringing Jews living in the area, which includes Pickering, Ajax, Whitby and Oshawa, closer together.

Matthew Surkis, one of the group's co-founders, estimates 100 Jewish families living in Durham, adding that "many are unaware that others exist."

The group, which meets monthly, has organized Chanukah and Purim parties and a breaking of the fast after Yom Kippur. It also plans to open a Sunday school for children.

"Being such a small minority," explains co-founder Joanie Gertler, "means we have to work really hard at being Jewish."

Jewish Families of Durham will be intensifying its advertising campaign, with the help of a UJA Federation continuity grant, in order to attract more Jewish families.

"Our goal," says Surkis, "is simply to socialize with other Jewish families and provide Jewish education for our children."

Enhancing Jewish identity

Jews are being encouraged to express their individual Jewish identities by an organization calling itself Tzavta.

Tzavta, which translates from Hebrew as "together," is modelled after a centre for Jewish intellectual, cultural and social activity in Israel.

Here in Toronto, Tzavta runs similar programs in order to celebrate Jewish holidays and cultural events in an inclusive and participatory way.

"We're providing a forum for progressive Jewish thought," explains Tzavta co-founder Mitzy Clement.

Programs, which include political panel discussions, dedication to Jewish heroes during Chanukah, holiday celebrations and Israeli folk dancing, are carried out with what Clement describes as "a humanistic appproach, in open fashion."

"A lot of us feel very Jewish," says Clement, "and Tzavta encourages more expressions of that Jewishness."

Welcoming newcomers

Three community agencies are reaching out to Jewish Russian teens arriving in Toronto.

Jewish Immigrant Aid Service, BBYO and the Bathurst Jewish Centre are pooling their resources for their New Arrival Outreach program. JIAS will provide the names of new Russian immigrants, the BJC will supervise programming, developed by BBYO, which will provide contacts with Canadian teens.

"This outreach will create a vehicle for Russian teens to socialize with their Canadian counterparts and become acquainted with Canadian Jewish culture," explains Deborah Pinsky, Executive Director of the BJC.

Pinsky hopes "Russian teens will feel less isolated and alienated if they are more included in programs with other Jewish teens."

Universities combine to market Israel

For the first time seven Israeli universities are working together to attract Canadian students for a one year overseas study program.

The Study Israel Consortium, which includes Bar Ilan University, Haifa University, Tel-Aviv University, Technion, The Hebrew University, The Weizmann Institute and Ben-Gurion University, is embarking on a bold new marketing initiative to convince post-secondary students that a year in Israel will improve their job prospects.

"Go further with education" is the motto being used in the design of funky new washroom (yes washroom) ads that will appear on campuses across Canada.

According to Michael Litvack, a representative of Canadian Friends of The Hebrew University, approximately 650 Canadian students participate in overseas Israel programs each year; 50% reside in Toronto.

"We've really got a great marketing concept," says Mark Rubinstein, the Canadian Overseas Program representative at Tel-Aviv University. "Students will be able to dial one number and gain access to information on all the available programs."

The consortium will also be participating in six Study Israel Fairs and will be working closely with UJA Federation's Jewish Campus Services to get their message across.

Alternative shul seeks permanent address

The largest Jewish gay and lesbian congregation in Toronto is looking for a permanent place to hold High Holiday services for its growing membership.

Keshet Shalom, which was founded in 1991, has been using the Wallin Lounge at the Bloor Jewish Community Centre for its Shabbat services for the last two years and during the High Holidays some members have been attending services at the Downtown Reform Minyan.

"The BJCC and Minyan have been very accommodating and generous," says Michelle Crawford-Bewley, Immediate Past President of Keshet Shalom, "but we would really like to have our own space where we can be recognized as an individual group."

The congregation, with a membership of 70, organizes monthly Shabbat celebrations, Chanukah and Purim parties, a Tu-Bishvat seder and a Jewish film night.

"If there is one way almost all Jews choose to observe their religion, it's by celebrating the High Holidays," says Crawford-Bewley. "We're trying to bring more people back to the High Holidays."

Dialogue connects young Canadians and Israelis

A new program, supported by a UJA Federation continuity grant, for young Jewish adults is something Israelis and Canadians can talk about.

Youth for Israel, (YOFI) was created by the Israel Program Centre, in conjunction with Habonim Dror, to fill a void in creative programming for Jews in their mid-to-late 30s, and to foster better understanding between Israelis and Canadians.

"There is virtually nothing for young Jewish adults once they've graduated," explains Michael Soberman, Director of the Ontario Israel Experience. "This dialogue will provide an interesting, challenging and socially appealing way for this group to interact."

YOFI, which has met four times in the last year, discusses religious, political and cultural issues and relies on word of mouth to attract participants.

"We ask everyone who comes to bring a friend next time," explains YOFI planning committee member Heidi Brown, who believes the program will "help bring Israelis living in Canada closer to their Canadian counterparts."

Michael Soberman and Heidi Brown.

Judaism steeped in reality

The Morris Winchevsky School is offering an alternative Jewish connection by relating traditional Jewish culture to modern daily life.

The school, housed in a community centre of the same name, after one of Jewish history's most celebrated poets, was founded in 1928. Secular Jewish families have been drawn there because of its humanist orientation toward Judaism.

"Our way of celebrating Jewish heritage," explains Maxine Hermolin, the school's Executive Director "is by linking Jewishness with the real world."

Relating the story of Passover to the struggle against apartheid and the war in Bosnia to the Holocaust are some examples of the Winchevsky approach.

Using a UJA Federation continuity grant, the school plans to begin a Family Sundays program involving parents and children and expand its adult education classes.

"We're providing a true alternative for secular Jewish families and mixed cultural families," says Hermolin. "Tolerance and respect have a lot to do with it."

Senior Care worker loves his 'good feeling kind of job'

Spotlight

Communities cannot function and prosper without the commitment, care and tireless efforts, mostly unrecognized, of countless hard-working individuals. They are the "unsung heroes" of the community. Spotlight will appear occasionally.

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Arnold Foss, supervisor of program development and volunteer recruitment at Senior Care says he has a "good feeling kind of job."

"All the work done for our clients makes them feel special and at the same time, the volunteers are engaged in something worthwhile. They feel good about themselves and the seniors feel good because they know the volunteers are working because they want to — because they enjoy it," he says.

Foss, 40, came to the agency, formerly Coordinated Services for the Jewish Elderly, 15 years ago. The agency's mandate is to provide specialized services, such as home support programs, caregiver relief, volunteer visiting or live-in worker placement, for those seniors who wish to remain in their own homes.

Student, senior paired up

He started out administering the agency's Meals on Wheels program from Baycrest Hospital and now, in addition to recruiting, training, recognizing and retaining volunteers, he is in charge of specialty volunteer programs.

One of his favorites is the agency's intergenerational program run in conjunction with the Jewish and the North York boards of education.

The pen-pal program was conceived in an attempt to involve young children with our clients who are homebound. A student and a senior are paired up and they correspond all year. At the end of the year, the seniors are picked up and brought to the school to meet their pen-pal.

"It really is an emotional moment. These people have become friends. They've shared feelings and experiences with each other. A lot of these kids have grandparents who live elsewhere, so there is not a lot of contact. Their pen-pals really fill a niche for them and to finally meet is just incredible. There are a lot of smiles and tears of joy. It is certainly the highlight of my year."

Arnold Foss

The birthday card program, in which students make cards for the agency's clients, is another successful venture, he says.

"One woman wrote in that she cried when she received her birthday card. It was the only one she received. A simple idea like that provides an uplifting feeling for people."

Also part of Foss' job is helping to run Habayit Shelanu, a seniors' building at Spadina Road and Davenport developed by Senior Care. He works with the board of directors, assists with the tenants' council and provides a liaison between tenants and their necessary services, such as cleaning, transportation and obtaining wheelchairs.

"It's good to see these seniors living independently in their own homes. It makes our work seem worthwhile," he says.

Working with the volunteers is a give-and-take situation, Foss says. "They bring with them their own experience and knowledge base and we learn a lot from them. They feel great about what they're doing and the seniors enjoy being with them. Our clients tell us time and time again how happy they are. I'm blessed every day at least 1,000 times."

Former Baron Byng grads gather for 48th reunion

By CELINE MIGDAL
Special to the CJN

MONTREAL – The old classrooms are filled with shelves of donated clothes and odd and ends that will be useful to someone in need, but the building no longer looks or feels like an institution of learning.

Nineteen old friends and former classmates and their spouses recently gathered at the old school in Montreal to celebrate the 48th reunion of Baron Byng High School, class of 1948, Room 41.

They renewed old friendships and exchanged memories of days gone by. The reunion started at the ancient Baron Byng building on St. Urbain Street, in what was once the old Jewish neighborhood, an area made famous by one of the school's best known alumni, novelist Mordecai Richler, whose graduating class this was.

Now the classrooms are no longer recognizable and there was much discussion about the location of Room 41. However, the rooms and corridors hold a lot of memories for former students, despite the fact that the building is no longer a school. It was sold in 1980 and now functions as a food and clothing depot and headquarters for Sun Youth.

Richler was the class president. "I'm delighted to meet old friends I have not seen for a long time, everyone seems to have done well," he said.

"They also seem to remember more of my squabbles with teachers in the old days. I had my share of those and the strap was applied liberally. I also spent a lot of time being absent and outside the principal's office."

Although Richler said he has been back to his old neighborhood on St. Urbain Street near Fairmont, he added, "I have not, however, been in touch with most of my classmates during the past 48 years."

The early part of the reunion took the form of a tour of the "old school" and a lunch on the premises. Memories of old pranks and boyish high spirits, such as hiding classmates' reading glasses and teachers' hearing aids, mixed with nostalgic reminiscences.

The late afternoon activities included a guided tour of the surrounding neighborhood and dinner.

A video of reminiscences about the school and its students, prepared by former teacher Frances Katz, 89, who is ill and was unable to attend, proved to be the highlight of the evening, according to Richard Rosenberg of the organizing committee.

Stanley Cadloff, also on the committee, described his old high school as "a place where cultures clashed. The teachers, who were mainly Scottish and English, faced a totally foreign lot of rowdy, young boys from a different culture. Our backgrounds were strange to the teachers. But what we had in common, though, was love of learning. Our parents were keen for us to learn and urged us on and the teachers wanted to teach us."

Baron Byng graduates consistently scored first in the provincial exams, and the school had many students in the top 20 percent for more than 20 years.

However, there was also resentment: Don Goldberg remembered that when the State of Israel was declared in 1948 and the students marched around the school yard singing Hatikvah, the class teacher, Mr. McLetchie, was singing, "There will always be an England" at the top of his voice.

The students were 99 percent Jewish. One of the few non-Jews was the late Joe Stracina, a former member of the Montreal Allouette football team. Three other members of the class have also died.

An ancient ossuary with a Greek inscription of the name of the carver and the place where he worked, Beirut. The artifact is part of an exhibit, From the Diaspora to Jerusalem, on display at Hamilton's McMaster University until Nov. 6. The exhibit comprises Second Temple period ossuaries, jewelry, clay lamps and glassware from recently discovered family tombs in Jerusalem's Kidron Valley, and is the only archeological exhibition traveling outside Israel during the Jerusalem 3000 anniversary.

Saskatoon's oldest Jewish resident celebrates 100 years

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

SASKATOON — Rebecca Segal Saskatoon's oldest Jewish resident, recently celebrated her 100th birthday surrounded by children, grandchildren and numerous nephews and nieces.

The party was held in a corner of the dining room of the nursing home where she has lived for the past couple of years. Sam Gross, her son-in-law, reports that she received letters of congratulations from the offices of the Queen, the governor general, the prime minister, the premier of Saskatchewan and a couple of local MLAs, one of whom joined the family in celebrating her birthday.

Segal was born on Sept. 23, 1896, in Romania, the youngest of five children of Moshe and Leah Davidner. The family came to Canada in 1905, settling in the Jewish farm colony in Lipton, Sask. Her two older brothers had gone ahead and prepared a cave in the side of a hill that the family called home for the first two years in Canada. For the next 25 years, the pioneers lived in a house built of logs and sod.

In 1920, Rebecca married Joseph Segal. They settled first in Regina then moved to rural Saskatchewan where Joseph was alternately a butcher, a trucker and operator of a patent medicine, confectionary and gift shop.

Segal and her husband had five children - Hye, Marjorie (Cohen), Harold, Gertie (Gross) and Jerry. The family moved to Saskatoon in 1959. Segal is a lifetime member of Hadassah in Saskatoon. She lived in her own home until 1990 and in a seniors condominium until two years ago.

She was widowed in 1979 and her daughter, Marjorie, died in 1989. She has 11 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren.

CJC-P helps promote cross cultural understanding

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Assisted by a provincial government grant of $20,600, Canadian Jewish Congress, Pacific region (CJC-P), will publish Face to Face, a group of four resource manuals to promote cross cultural understanding through outreach.

B.C. Attorney General Ujjal Dosanjh, on advising CJC-P's chair Dr. Michael Elterman of approval of the grant, said "multicultural activities such as yours are crucial in realizing goals contained in British Columbia's Multiculturalism Act ... I wish you all the best for the successful implementation of your project."

CJC-P says its four manuals for Face to Face will cover Hate Propaganda and Racially Motivated Crime; Human Rights; Multiculturalism; Interfaith.

The project will require one full time staff person plus "many hours donated by lay persons in the Jewish community."

Each manual will include accessible and updated material on each of the issues — including briefs, legislation initiatives and audio-visual presentations about the issues that will trigger dialogue.

Each manual will be self-contained to provide workshops and training on the issues. Each manual will provide the tools to develop community-based input and responses to the issues.

A target focus of the project, says CJC-P, will be youth and leadership development as well as visible minority women. Congress notes that the CJC umbrella covers some 32 faith and family service agencies, many of which serve a clientele "that is far from being exclusively Jewish. Comprehensive training of their staffs, volunteers and boards of directors go a long way in promoting harmonious relations among all users of these services."

The project, says Congress, "will serve the broadest segments" of B.C.'s population. It could serve as a resource for law enforcement agencies, legislators, interfaith agencies, NGOs, ethnic communities and the media." CJC-P will provide training to Jewish and non-Jewish agencies as well as other public organizations involved in like-minded activities.

Story of the Shack revisited

By ELANA LAVINE

LONDON – In Grade 3, I spent a good half-hour drawing a crayon picture of a sukkah. I remember slaving over that particular picture and taking it home to my parents. That day also included a Sukkot play, a final lesson on traditional Sukkot customs and some singing. The topic over the dinner table that night was What I Did Today for Sukkot.

This, of course, was back in my day school days, when each Jewish holiday carried with it hours of lessons, singing and arts and crafts, culminating in a big colorful assembly and maybe even an early noon dismissal. Now that I am in university, what each Jewish holiday carries with it is purely up to me.

I don't have my Hebrew teachers anymore, nor do I have my machberet (notebook) with my childish scrawls titled The Importance of Sukkot. However, like many of my Jewish friends at the University of Western Ontario, I have properly celebrated Sukkot thanks to "the Shack."

The story of "the Shack" is like a fairy tale. Once upon a time, a student was making her way through campus when, on Western's official shmoozing ground aka the Concrete Beach, she spotted an odd little shack roofed with some loose bamboo matting.

Hmm, she thought, vagrants setting up camp? A refugee protest? A real estate office for a back-to-the-wild lifestyle condominium? Asking inside, she was told that this was a sukkah. The Jewish people celebrate a festival that includes sitting inside a sukkah, making blessings and eating festive meals.

After expressing her thanks, she headed over to meet her friends at the library and told them of her visit to the Shack. "It's actually called a soo-cah," she explained, "and it's for Jews."

One of her friends got up from the table smiling. "They built a sukkah out there?" she asked. "Man, I have to go see that."

So she did. The sukkah visit included the blessing over the lulav and the etrog, and two blessings over the large piece of honey cake she was given: one for the cake and one for sitting in the sukkah to eat it.

She vaguely recalled writing all of this in some old, smudgy notebook and dancing round a sukkah when she was 10. This seemed like eons ago and this year she hadn't even known that Sukkot had begun.

The story of the Shack has since repeated itself many times. Some of the people who came to the sukkah could say the blessings beautifully and shake the lulav like a pro; others were coached. Some actually said no to the cake. The sukkah, however, was a visual reminder to a lot of Jewish students that even though the daily hustle and bustle of university whirled round as usual, is was Sukkot for us – even if we had all forgotten our machbarot at home.

Israel seeking to mend fences with Jordan

By DAVID MAKOVSKY AND LIAT COLLINS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is considering dispatching his foreign policy adviser Dore Gold to Jordan in the coming days, in a bid to mend fences with King Hussein, officials say.

Hussein has made blistering attacks on Netanyahu in recent days, charging the premier with "arrogance."

"It's inevitable that there will be disagreements here and there, even with friends. It happens even in the best families," Netanyahu said last week. "But I have no doubt about our commitment to peace with Jordan, developing political and economic relations with them, and a dialogue with them. I see King Hussein as an important partner."

Hussein's anger with Netanyahu began after not being consulted by Israel on opening the Hasmonean Tunnel exit in Jerusalem, and continued during the Washington summit which ended without conclusive results.

Improving ties with Jordan is key for Netanyahu, who has expressed pride in what he considers to be a special relationship with Amman. Gold has also been a big advocate of close Israel-Jordan ties. The meeting has been delayed for a few days due to Hussein's visiting abroad.

In an interview published last week in the London-based daily Ashraq al-Awsat, Hussein blasted the Netanyahu government and questioned whether the region was headed to war.

"The main question now is what are we going to do? Does Israel want to return to the fortress mentality and an arrogant feeling of power? I've had the chance to know the Israelis quite well and I'm worried about them," King Hussein said.

"What worries me most is my feeling that those with limited perspectives are affecting the chain of events, driving it in the opposite direction of peace. It worries me that the minority can terrorize the majority in the region," he said.

"I just hope that he [Netanyahu] realizes that he has to deal with Arafat and the Palestinians as equal partners and not as one who is of a lower level, that he has to look down upon," Hussein said.

Sources confirm remarks reported in this week's edition of Newsweek whereby at the final lunch of the White House summit headed by President Bill Clinton, Hussein turned to Netanyahu and looked him in the eye, saying: "What is needed is not arrogance, but wisdom and vision. My friend Yitzhak Rabin had that wisdom and vision. I hope that one day you might have it, too."

Looking at Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, Hussein continued, "This man and I have had our differences. But this man has courage. He wants to help our people." There was no bilateral meeting between Netanyahu and Hussein during the Washington summit.

In related developments, King Hussein telephoned President Ezer Weizman last week to invite him to visit Jordan.

Weizman responded that he would be happy to come to Amman after coordinating the visit with Netanyahu. His spokesperson Batya Keinan confirmed the conversation.

Only progress in the peace process will lead to a warming of relations with Jordan, Hussein reportedly told Weizman. He also expressed satisfaction at last week's meeting between Weizman and Arafat, and at the president's upcoming visit to Cairo.

Israel set to ease closure

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Israel's defence minister said Israel will significantly ease the closure, removing the seal around most Palestinian-controlled cities, allowing in 35,000 laborers, and opening all the crossings in the Gaza Strip. Troops, however, will be kept at their current reinforced levels so that they can quickly respond to any eruption of unrest.

Yitzhak Mordechai ordered the steps after assessing the situation with top army and security commanders.

The number of Palestinian workers from the territories allowed into Israel will be raised to 35,000, more than double the current 14,000. Mordechai also decided to lift the internal closures in the West Bank except in Nablus.

The closures had been eased last week around most Palestinian-controlled cities, but now the residents of those cities will be allowed to travel freely throughout the West Bank. The external closure imposed in 1994, which has barred most of the two million Palestinians from Israel, remains in place.

Mordechai also ordered the Karni and Sufa crossings to resume full operation to ease the movement of goods in and out of the Gaza Strip. The Defence Ministry stressed that all steps will depend on security considerations.

"Netanyahu is leading us to the edge of the abyss"
---Rabbi Ovadia Yosef, spiritual leader of the Shas party
Globe & Mail, Friday, Sept 27, p A-1

Binyamin Netanyahu ran for Prime Minister of Israel on a platform of strengthening Israel's security. He said that the way to ensure safety for Israel was to slow down negotiations with the Palestinians.

Netanyahu did NOT seek, nor did he receive, a mandate to undermine the peace process. But that is precisely what he has done by the following actions:

- authorizing the expansion of Israel's settlements in the West Bank;
- demolishing Palestinian homes and community facilities in East Jerusalem;
- sidestepping the Oslo treaty, whose obligations he promised to honour;
- continuing the unnecessarily restrictive closure of borders, thus depriving many Palestinians of their former livelihood;
- ruling out national independence for the Palestinians.

Prime Minister Netanyahu is sending a clear but dangerous message: forget about negotiating a just and secure peace. Both Israelis and Palestinians are now captives of his Greater Israel ideology. Both peoples stand to lose. Both deserve better.

NOW more than ever, Peace Now needs your support.

Arafat lashes out at Netanyahu

Perhaps as a sign of progress, top Palestinian and Israeli security officials met to discuss Hebron away from the Erez junction.

The meeting, believed to be held in the Tel Aviv area, between army planning branch head Maj.-Gen. Shaul Mofaz and the two heads of the PA Preventive Security, Col. Jibril Rajoub and Col. Mahmoud Dahlan, reportedly included U.S. special Middle East peace coordinator Dennis Ross. Mofaz was reported to have said that redeployment in Hebron has been accepted as a political decision by the government.

"What we seek in Hebron are security arrangements which are completely compatible with the peace deal," Netanyahu said in a speech to business executives in Tel Aviv. "They have nothing to do with reopening the agreements."

In a statement released last week, Ross announced that the peace talks would move from Erez to Taba and Eilat, where discussions will be held on a rotating basis.

Furthermore, he said, "both sides agreed that they are not reopening or renegotiating the [Oslo 2] agreement and that they are discussing the mechanisms and the modalities for how best to implement the agreement."

Deri meets Arafat's No. 2

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Knesset Member Haim Ramon, who arranged a "secret" meeting last week between Shas leader Aryeh Deri and Arafat's number two man Mahmoud Abbas, said that it was easier to hold such meetings now than before the elections.

Ramon told Israel Radio that "meetings like this should have taken place before. But before the elections, Shas's voters would have been more critical of it. Today, after Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu shook Arafat's hand and claimed he was enchanted by him, it was easier."

Ramon said Abbas - who was curious about Deri, Shas and Shas mentor Rabbi Ovadia Yosef's positions - asked to meet Deri. Ramon approached Deri, who after consulting Yosef and advising Netanyahu, was glad to come to the meeting.

"It's important for Shas, which is the second largest party in the coalition and a moderate party, to meet the number two man in the Palestinian Authority," he added.

Ramon said Abbas' main complaint was that for the past three months, until this past week, no negotiations were being held with the Palestinians at all. Dan Shomron, the head of the steering committee for negotiations with the Palestinians, came to one meeting and said he was not authorized to do anything, Abbas told Ramon.

"There are many problems between the two sides. If Netanyahu had said let's sit down and solve them, the Palestinians may have been more flexible on the Hebron issue. But when nothing happens, then bloody events occur," Ramon said.

"I'm glad Deri came to the meeting and the two got to know each other and talk. Only direct talks can advance the peace process. Creating confidence between the two sides - that's the essential element which is missing between the Palestinian Authority and the prime minister and his people."

Britain detains 15 Israelis seeking asylum

London Jewish Chronicle

LONDON – Of the 15 Israelis now seeking political asylum in Britain, six had earlier been expelled from Jerusalem's Ohr Somayach Yeshivah for missing too many classes.

"They were good boys, but they were very lazy," said Rabbi Eliahu Essas, director of Russian-language programs at the yeshivah.

The men, who came to Israel from the former Soviet Union, are seeking asylum because they were allegedly harassed for their right-wing views by Israeli security forces. They also claim that the security forces had placed them in administrative detention.

The men, who are between 19 and 27 years old, are thought to have arrived initially at Heathrow Airport.

As of late last week, they still were in various detention centers in Britain.

After the six students were expelled from the yeshivah, it was revealed, some of them apparently formed a "commune" with the other nine men, also thought to be pupils at the school, and went into business together.

The group's spiritual leader is a 29-year-old Russian immigrant active in Israel's National Religious Party. The group is believed to have run a video rental shop in Israel as well as a building renovations and cleaning business.

In an unrelated incident, 10 Israelis were flown back this week after a reported attempt to claim asylum in Britain was rejected by the immigration authorities.

The Israelis are members of a family that came to the Jewish state several years ago from the former Soviet Union.

Family members later told an Israeli journalist that they had not sought to claim asylum in Britain and that there had been a misunderstanding.

Political tensions beset Jerusalem

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

It was merely the tip of the iceberg.

Last month's disturbances in eastern Jerusalem over the status of an archeological tunnel running from the Western Wall to the Muslim Quarter were just one more unsettling sampler of the political tensions which beset Israel's capital.

Mideast Analysis

Final status talks on Jerusalem, as called for under the terms of the Oslo accords, have not even begun. But the posturing and the manouevering are well under way.

Israel claims title to all of Jerusalem, including the eastern, mainly Arab-inhabited sector it annexed in 1967. The Palestinian Authority (PA) wants East Jerusalem as the capital of a future Palestinian state, and may demand the return of what it describes as Arab property in the western, Jewish half of the city.

The battle for Jerusalem, revered by Judaism, Islam and Christianity, is really a microcosm of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

As Israel and the PA lock horns over Jerusalem, it is far from certain whether the present Israeli government will even agree to address the topic in formal discussions.

In a recent interview with Al-Quds, a Palestinian daily published in East Jerusalem, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said, "There is no way we are going to agree with the Palestinian Authority on the final status of Jerusalem. It looks like it is one of those unresolved issues."

Netanyahu's statement was in line with Likud thinking. Less than two weeks before Israel's May 29 general election, he declared that he would not feel compelled to honor arrangements on Jerusalem negotiated by the Labor government and the PA, headed by PLO chieftain Yasser Arafat.

Not surprisingly, the Palestinians have reacted vehemently to Netanyahu's suggestion that Jerusalem may not be on the agenda.

Faisal Husseini, the PLO's senior official in East Jerusalem, has warned that peace talks will collapse if Jerusalem is removed from negotiations.

"Israel," he warned, "must pull out of all East Jerusalem, in accordance with United Nations Resolution 242. If Israel has claims in East Jerusalem, they can be discussed in negotiations, along with our claims in West Jerusalem."

Resolution 242, the cornerstone of Mideast diplomacy since the Six Day War, envisions an Israeli withdrawal from territories captured during the Six Day War. Jerusalem is not explicitly mentioned, but the Palestinians consider East Jerusalem as occupied territory.

Israel takes a completely diametrical view of the matter, and the vast majority of Israelis agree that Jerusalem in its entirety should be Israel's indivisible and undivided capital.

The previous Israeli government, headed by Yitzhak Rabin and Shimon Peres, adopted the position that Jerusalem was "religiously open but politically closed."

Israel passed a law banning PA political activity in East Jerusalem. It forced the Palestinians to sign a declaration pledging that its offices in East Jerusalem were in no way connected with the PA. It tried to pressure foreign dignitaries to avoid Orient House, the nerve centre of the Palestinian movement in East Jerusalem.

The current Israeli government has not only continued this policy but tightened and expanded it.

In addition to insisting on Jerusalem's territorial integrity, Netanyahu has categorically ruled out any idea of "multiple sovereignty" in Jerusalem. And several months ago, he gave the PA an ultimatum: either close three of your offices in East Jerusalem or face the prospect of no further talks on Palestinian questions. The PA succumbed to Israel's pressure.

Israel also asserted its claim to Jerusalem by other means.

It forced a member of the recently convened Palestinian legislative council to sign a letter stating that the office in his home was not connected with the PA.

It demolished a Palestinian community centre in East Jerusalem being restored without a building permit. Evidently, the Likud mayor of Jerusalem, Ehud Olmert, ordered the demolition without bothering to inform Netanyahu. As a result of the furor caused by this embarrassing incident, Netanyahu urged Olmert to act with restraint when dealing with demolitions.

But this mixup in communications didn't stop Olmert from subsequently announcing that Israel intends to channel significant funds into Jerusalem "to deepen" its sovereignty over the entire city.

As part of its campaign in Jerusalem, the present Israeli government is encouraging Jews to buy real estate in Arab neighborhoods and trying to counter the PA's growing influence in public Arab schools.

Netanyahu has failed to carry out an election promise to close Orient House. However, he and his ministers have made it clear that foreign diplomatic visits to Orient House will not be tolerated.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 7

• Yediot Achronot reported that Palestinian security forces arrested an alleged suicide bomber on his way to Jerusalem to blow himself up on a bus.

• The former coach of Israel's national ping-pong team, Alexander Redalis, was accused of spying for the former Soviet Union. Israeli newspapers disclosed that Redalis has been detained for the past three months.

Oct. 8

• President Ezer Weizman and Chairman Yasser Arafat concluded talks at Weizman's home in Caesarea with a call for an end to violence and renewed efforts to advance the peace process.

• Arafat reportedly escaped death when two jeeps in his convey travelling to meet Hosni Mubarak collided. One Palestinian officer was killed; four others were wounded.

Oct. 9

• An earthquake whose epicentre was in the Mediterranean about 100 kilometres southwest of Cyprus was felt in Israel and in other parts of the Middle East. It was reported as having registered 6.1 on the Richter scale.

Oct. 10

• The Jerusalem Post reported that Agriculture Minister Rafael Eitan, former energy minister Gonen Segev and two Tsomet activists, Haggai Ashur and Sami Shenfeld, were indicted yesterday in Haifa Magistrate's Court for violating the Privacy Protection Law by allegedly using confidential IDF information to threaten an activist into leaving the party.

Oct. 11

• Former Labor justice minister David Liba'i announced his resignation from the Knesset. He said his decision was connected to a law forbidding Knesset members to hold other jobs at the same time. His seat will be filled by Eitan Kabel, a former adviser in the housing ministry.

Israel & the Jewish World

'Does Israel really understand the Middle East?'

By RON TIRA
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

Look at what Israel gave Egypt and what it got and answer this: Does Israel really understand the Middle East?

Opinion

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak has been hailed in certain circles, including much of the world media, as a "champion of peace." His admirers credit him with "trying to dampen Arab skepticism about Israel, assuring [his] citizens and...neighbors that it can be trusted" (Douglas Jehl, in the New York Times).

A closer look at what's happening, though, reveals a reality that could hardly be more different.

In the Camp David accords, Israel agreed to give Egypt the whole of the Sinai, with its strategic depth, oil fields and air bases, as well as willingly evacuating settlements for the first time in its history. In addition, it agreed to recognize the Palestinian people and enter into the autonomy agreement. In exchange, Israel contracted for what could in contemporary terms be called a "full peace."

But what is the actual content of this peace?

During the almost two decades that have passed since the Camp David accords, Israeli-Egyptian trade relations have not only seen no meaningful development; they are in fact non-existent. What limited economic activity does exist is one-sided – a few Israeli investments in Egypt and Israeli tourism.

A similarly disappointing reality can be seen in other areas such as cultural relations and the Egyptian state-controlled media's attitude to Israel.

Adversary

Throughout this period, Egypt has concentrated on an impressive military buildup; estimates are that its army is the strongest and most advanced of Arab forces. It is certainly much stronger than anything required to defend Egypt against other neighbors like Libya or Sudan.

The Egyptian army's "reference-enemy" – meaning the projected adversary against which the Egyptian forces train, equip themselves and are deployed – remains Israel. The expensive tunnels constructed under the Suez Canal were built to accommodate far more "traffic" than the most optimistic civilian-use predictions could require.

The most troubling fact, however, is that Israel did not acquire a political ally in Cairo. Egypt, which found itself politically reinforced by its peace with Israel, mainly in the United States, has been leading every possible political battle against Israel.

It has pressed Arab and African countries not to normalize ties with Israel, lobbied Washington against aiding Israel in absorbing Russian immigrants, pulled every possible string in its Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty campaign, opposed Israel in international forums and continually sided with Israel's opponents, including in times of crisis like the recent one.

The fact that Mubarak has never honored Israel with a state visit is dismissed by many Israelis as meaningless, and yet it is highly significant in Arab culture.

Sometimes one might even be tempted to think that for Egypt, "diplomacy is the continuation of war by other means," to paraphrase Klausewitz, a military theorist.

This Egyptian political attitude has spanned both Likud and Labor governments.

It is interesting to compare this with Israeli-Syrian relations. From the end of the Yom Kippur War till today, Israel has enjoyed a peaceful border with both Egypt and Syria – and yet Israel has paid no meaningful price to Syria. In fact, Syria has a better "peace" (in the sense of absence of war) with Israel than with any of its other neighbors.

In spite of a formal peace with Turkey, Lebanon, Iraq and Jordan, each of these four Syrian borders has seen more violence than the post-'73 Israeli-Syrian border.

Unlike the "rehabilitation" resulting from Egypt's peace with Israel that has brought it American economic and military aid, Syria continues to weaken on both these accounts – a good explanation, perhaps, of Syrian "peaceability." Consequently Damascus wields far less political weight against Israel than does Cairo.

In spite of recent rhetoric by Egyptian leaders amounting to a proclamation that Egypt's peace is conditional upon Israel's meeting new demands, the likelihood of an immediate eruption of violence with our southern neighbor is nonetheless very low.

Having said that, one must be watchful of Egypt's impressive military capabilities. Ever-increasing Egyptian internal unrest, not to mention the recent assassination attempts on Mubarak's life, raise more questions about the possible use such military capability might be put to in future.

The Egyptian army's dependence upon the United States is only a limited comfort, particularly in view of the internal Egyptian political struggles and the possibilty of a crisis erupting in the region. After all, Iran fought Iraq with American equipment years after American aid was no longer available.

The most fundamental and troubling question that remains is this: If Israel gave Egypt "land plus" and got in exchange a naked peace, a reinforced political foe and an increasingly powerful potential military adversary, does this mean there is something wrong with our perception of the Middle East?

I BELIEVE

I BELIEVE the future of our community and Israel are inextricably linked.

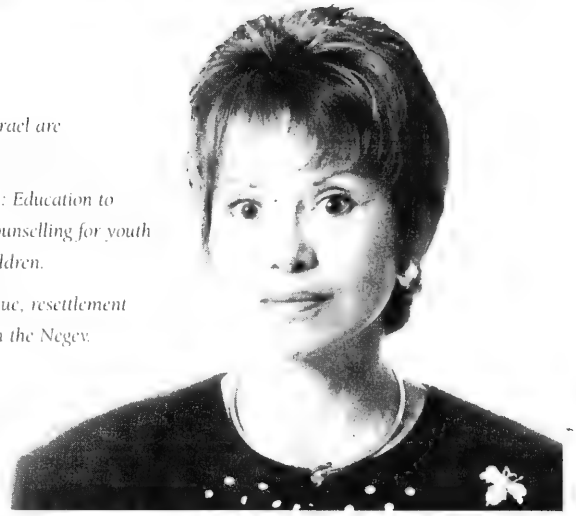
Many of Israel's serious social issues mirror our own: Education to promote Jewish identity, pluralism and tolerance. Counselling for youth in distress. Crisis shelters for abused women and children.

Other challenges are unique to Israel's realities: Rescue, resettlement and absorption of new immigrants. Water projects in the Negev. Jewish-Arab relations.

I believe UJA Federation is the most efficient means of ensuring that our values are translated into programs and services that answer Israel's needs. Now. And always.



Sherry Cooper

UJA Federation supports programs and services in Israel dedicated to Jewish rescue, social services, and education. But they are not enough. Needs are growing, and demand must be met if Israel is to stay healthy and strong. Resources can come from only one place: Our community. Each and every one of us.

Portugese Jews prepare to mark expulsion anniversary

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

LISBON, PORTUGAL — The tiny Jewish population in this mainly Catholic country is gearing up for a series of events Dec. 4 and 5 to commemorate the 500th anniversary of the expulsion of the Jews from Portugal.

On Nov. 17, an exhibit on the history of the Jews in Portugal will open in the Tower of Portagem in Marvao. This Portugese town, six kilometres west of the Spanish border, once served as a transit point for thousands of Jews fleeing the Spanish Inquisition.

Scheduled events for Dec. 4 and 5, to be attended by local and Israeli dignitaries, include a special session of the Portuguese parliament, the dedication of a monument in Lisbon and ceremonies to be held at both the Dona Maria II National Theatre and the Shaare Tikve Synagogue in Lisbon. The courtyard synagogue, built in 1902, is noteworthy for its decorative columns and the imposing two-storey arched backdrop framing its Aron Kodesh.

In Belmonte, a mountain town some 325 km northeast of Lisbon, a new synagogue will be inaugurated on Dec. 4. The town of 3,500 people has a Jewish community of at least 150 people, most of whom are Marranos (a term not considered pejorative in Portugal), who have kept Jewish customs in secret for centuries, or former Marranos who have formally converted to Judaism.

Despite its size, the Belmonte community is a significant one; by way of comparison, the Jewish community of Lisbon, Portugal's capital, officially numbers only 300 adults (and an unknown number of children) — less than one percent of the city's total population of one million inhabitants.

Although a Jewish presence in Portugal predated the establishment of the country in the 12th century, there was no Portuguese Jewish population per se from the time of the expulsion until a century ago, when Jewish immigrants, mostly from North Africa, began to arrive in the country.

Benjamin Oron

The Jewish population swelled to about 2,000 people during World War II, when the country served as a temporary haven for Jews fleeing the Nazis.

Today, Jews in Portugal — including a sprinkling in the Algarve (Portugal's southernmost province) and a handful of cities elsewhere — are "quite integrated," according to Benjamin Oron, Israel's ambassador to Portugal since 1993.

Portugal's active Muslim community, about 25,000 strong, apparently coexists harmoniously with the Jewish community. In a recent meeting with North American Jewish journalists in his Lisbon office, Oron said the head of the Islamic community attended a memorial service for slain Israeli prime minister Yitzhak Rabin and that some local Jewish leaders paid their respects when a former Islamic community leader died. The majority of the Muslims in Portugal are Indo-Pakistani in origin, he added.

There is no "hard-core" or "institutionalized" anti-Semitism in the country, said Oron, although there are some "far right organizations which are very marginal."

If local graffiti are any indication, the anti-racists are far more vocal than the right-wingers.

Samuel Lavy, a Lisbon economist who led Sukkot services at Shaare Tikve for about three dozen men and two dozen women, said that he has not experienced anti-Semitism, but has encountered profound ignorance about Jews among his Catholic counterparts.

The Portuguese government was very receptive to suggestions from the Israeli embassy about marking the 500th anniversary of the expulsion, said Oron, whose office took the initiative in arranging a commemoration.

Israeli-Portuguese diplomatic relations opened relatively recently, as it was only in 1974 that Portugal became a democracy after almost five decades of dictatorship under Antonio de Oliveira Salazar.

In 1977, Israel's small consulate in Lisbon was converted into an official embassy, but it wasn't until 1991 that a Portuguese embassy was established in Israel.

For the past five years, the two countries have had "normal and balanced" diplomatic relations, including trade and high-level visits, said Oron.

"From 1986, when Portugal joined the European Union, diplomatic relations were [progressively] upgraded," he added. "Our trade relations compared to other countries are still very modest, but are growing steadily."

Portuguese exports to Israel have grown from $60 million (US) two years ago to about $100 million. In the other direction (Israel to Portugal), trade has remained steady at about $60 million.

Perhaps coincidentally, the Portuguese prime minister, social democrat Antonio Guterres, elected last year, had a Jewish grandmother — a well-known fact in Portugal.

Actually, some locals say that every fifth Portuguese has some Jewish blood running through his veins. Others find that estimate too conservative and put the figure at one in two.

As if to underscore the point, a flight attendant on our return trip, on discovering that a group of Jewish journalists were on the flight, let us know that her grandmother was Marrano.

It wasn't until she moved to the United States as a teenager that Carminda Widmer, now an employee of Delta Air Lines (working recently on a combined TAP Air Portugal/Delta flight), met Jews who practised openly and subsequently discovered her grandmother's secret.

Frances Kraft was in Portugal recently as a guest of the Portuguese National Tourist Office and TAP Air Portugal.

Group home for autistic Israeli kids planned

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Yehoshua is one of Harold and Vivian Zigelman's 11 grandchildren. He has reddish hair and freckles, and is very affectionate. He lives with his parents and five brothers and sisters in Efrat.

But he is heartbreakingly unlike their other grandchildren, because he is severely autistic.

Autism is a neurological disorder, which renders its victims unable to interact with the world around them.

Yehoshua was three when he was diagnosed, the Zigelmans told The CJN on a recent trip to Toronto, part of a fundraising swing which will include New York and Florida.

"At 18 months, he could recognize the letters of the alphabet and numbers between one and nine, Vivian said. "Then he lost the ability to name the letters — we don't know if what happened was he lost the ability to recognize them."

He also began to display the repetitive behaviors typical of children with autism — running around in circles, rocking, flapping.

His behavior is erratic and he has to be watched 24 hours a day, 60 minutes an hour, Harold said. In a flash, he will run away. "We have found him in an Arab vinyard, and once near a swimming pool."

What is more difficult for the family, they said, is that "the other children have to live behind locked doors," as Vivian described it, because, without realizing what he is doing, he can be violent.

"Life in the home is completely regimented, so that Yehoshua can be taken care of."

These children can stay at home while they are young. Many autistic children in Israel go to Dekalim, a school operated by Alut, the National Association for Autistic Children.

The school provides a structure to their day and training in basic life skills. The problem is that it only takes youngsters up to 17 years of age.

At the same time, it is harder and harder to keep older children with autism at home, since they are bigger and stronger and the potential for danger to themselves and others is greater and the toll on the rest of the family becomes unbearable.

There are at least 14 families in this situation, the Zigelmans said, including Yehoshua's. They want to establish a group home, where their children will be able to live in safety and dignity for the rest of their lives.

"The government, under the health care system, is mandated to take care of these people," Vivian said. "Once a physical plant is established, the government will take over and maintain it."

The 14 families, who have established an organization called Netzach Yehoshua Inc. to raise funds for a series of group homes, need to raise over $1 million (US) for each home. That amount will include outfitting it with special equipment so that "each resident can learn and thrive" in a safe atmosphere.

With the help of their niece and nephew, Danny and Joy Zigelman, the couple has arranged for tax deductable receipts to be issued by Mizrachi of Canada.

For more information, call Danny and Joy Zigelman, 905-731-6383.

Palestinians train in Negev

JERUSALEM – Seventeen senior Palestinian doctors and public health workers recently graduated from a three-week course – the first of its kind – at the Ben-Gurion University (BGU) in Beersheva.

The course, run by Prof. Batya Serub of the epidemiology and health services assessment department at BGU's health sciences faculty, was held in cooperation with the Palestinian Authority and Soroka Hospital.

Funded by the U.S. Consulate and the Rich Foundation in Switzerland, the course dealt with management of health systems and promoting public health. Senior Soroka and BGU doctors held workshops, in which specific medical problems were raised. BGU is the first academic institution to hold advanced training courses for Palestinian health workers.

CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest

The CJN announces its second annual Chanukah poetry contest.

Who can enter:
Anyone can enter except CJN employees or members of their family.

There are three age categories for entrants:

1. Twelve years old and under,
2. Thirteen to 18 years old,
3. Eighteen years old and up.

How to enter:
The poems must be about Chanukah; they cannot be longer than forty lines. A maximum of one poem per entrant may be submitted. Please include your name, age, address, and phone number with the poem. We would prefer to receive type-written poems if possible.

We will return poems if you send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

You may mail or deliver your poems to:
CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest, The Canadian Jewish News,
10 Gateway Blvd., Suite 420, Don Mills, Ontario, M3C 3A1.

The contest closes at 5:00 pm on Monday, Nov. 18, 1996.

Prizes:
The judges will choose six poems to be published, two from each of the three categories, which in their opinion, most poetically and evocatively convey an aspect of the meaning of Chanukah. Each of the "winners" will also receive a cheque for $50.00.

Only six poems will be selected as "winners". Space permitting, we may publish other poems as honorable mentions. The decisions of the judges will be final. The odds of "winning" depend upon the number and the quality of submissions received.

How the winners will be notified:
"Winning" entrants will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, Nov. 22, 1996.

When the prizes will be awarded:
The winning poems will be published in The CJN of Dec. 5, 1996. We look forward to receiving your poems. May the miracle of Chanukah and the magic of its light be reflected in your poems.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Regie des Loteries et courses du Quebec.

Veteran musicians strike a chord

By MIRIAM CHINSKY
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Toronto Senior Strings, an orchestra that grew out of the dream of one woman, Ruth Budd, opens its third season with an afternoon concert on Oct. 31 in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church (across the road from Roy Thomson Hall).

Budd, first woman professional bass player in Canada and first woman bassist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra (TSO), was not ready for mandatory retirement from the TSO at age 65 and she knew there were others out there with the verve and continuing capacity to speak eloquently with their music.

In 1993, she founded the Toronto Senior Strings (TSS), the majority of whose musicians were former members of the Toronto Symphony. Veteran TSO concertmaster Jascha Milkis, accepted the position of TSS concertmaster.

TSS players are senior in musical achievement, just as senior office executives are senior in corporate accomplishment, Budd says.

TSS conductor Victor Feldbrill, a maestro with major orchestras from Toronto to Tokyo, notes that "good instrumentalists don't stop at 65!"

In fact, these performers also teach, appear on other stages, compose and play backup music in their "retirement."

The orchestra features gifted young soloists and a Canadian composition at each concert, with music ranging from baroque to contemporary.

From the beginning, audience response has been enthusiastic.

After attending the first concert, TSO trumpeter Joseph Umbrico wrote: "To say that the performance was satisfying in every respect would be an understatement. The program was played with the artistry to which I have become accustomed over the many years I have performed with these outstanding musicians ... The juxtaposition of an orchestra of notable retired musicians giving a concert and at the same time presenting a young, promising soloist was a demonstration of a true musical experience."

To make it convenient for seniors, the concerts start at 2 p.m. and last one hour and 15 minutes. They are over well before rush hour. In addition, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church has fine accoustics, is easily reached by public transit and is wheelchair accessible.

Admission, geared to fixed incomes, is $10 per concert. Tickets are available at the door or may be purchased at $28 for the series of three performances — Oct. 31 and one each in April and June 1997 — from TSS, 204 Airdrie Dr., Toronto, M4C 1M8.

Fires in the Mirror does an inadequate job

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Media inadequacy in clarifying such an explosive situation as in Brooklyn's Crown Heights in the summer of 1991 is exposed in Fires in the Mirror, running at Canadian Stage upstairs until Oct.26.

At that time a black boy was killed in an auto accident involving a motorcade carrying the Lubavitcher Rebbe and a few hours later a gang of black youths stabbed to death Yankel Rosenbaum, a chassidic scholar from Australia. Rioting then ensued for several days.

The 90-minute one-woman (Marium Carvell) play is a series of 23 monologues by blacks and Jews based on journalistic interviews by playwright Anna Deavere Smith, a Stanford University professor. In the end, they do nothing to heal the rift in the two communities.

With perhaps good intentions, black theatre company WUM, in association with Theatre Passe Muraille, has compounded the problem with an over-busy, wide-angled production, lacking intimacy, using noisy newsreel and video footage. It's another media circus.

The Fires in the Mirror program distributed in the theatre says WUM is mandated to explore African continuity in a context of poetic and imagistic theatre. The journalistic monologues certainly do this, but one can question whether the story of the Jewish victims and the Jewish community's fight for continuity, gets equal billing.

This reviewer could not summon the willing suspension of belief necessary to accept, no matter how artistically expressed, a black woman's portrayal of Lubavitcher rabbis, housewives and Letty Cottin Pogrebin, a Jewish feminist.

On the other hand, her monologues of black artists and activists Ntozete Shange and Angela Davis sound genuine. Particularly frightening to Jews are the appearances of Conrad Mohamed, Louis Farrakhan's right-hand man, Rev. Al Sharpton and the minister of a black church in Brooklyn.

There may be useful ways of bringing blacks and Jews closer together in a dramatic context, but Fires in the Mirror is not one of them.

Festival of Authors set for Oct.23-Nov.2

TORONTO – This year's International Festival of Authors, which takes place between Oct. 23 and Nov. 2, features several personalities of interest to Jewish readers.

Lynne Reid Banks is a British novelist who has set some of her stories in Israel.

Reid Banks, who lived on a kibbutz for about a decade, has written over 30 books, including The L-Shaped Room and Harry the Poisonous Centipede, her latest novel.

Leonard Baskin heads The Gehenna Press, an important art publisher specializing in limited editions. He is also a sculptor, painter and engraver.

Bruce Jay Friedman, an American novelist whose work has been compared to that of Saul Bellow and Bernard Malamud, has gained recognition for his black humor.

Radio show explores authors' words

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Book lovers don't often get the opportunity to speak to authors. But every Sunday afternoon, the next best thing is available on CBC radio's popular program, Writers & Company, hosted by Eleanor Wachtel.

On this nationally-broadcast show, Wachtel interviews Canadian and foreign writers, allowing listeners to sit back and enjoy a civilized conversation.

Since Writer's & Company's inception in 1990, Wachtel has talked to numerous novelists, exploring their methods, influences, views, idiosyncracies and aspirations. Usually, the result is quite felicitous.

Last year, Writers & Company won a coveted CBC award for programming excellence, the judges noting that if they had to choose one hour of radio to take to a desert island, it would be Wachtel's program.

Now Wachtel has assembled 22 of her best interviews in a volume entitled More Writers & Company (Alfred A. Knopf Canada, $28.95). Published on Oct. 12, it is a sequel to the first volume, Writers & Company, which is still in print.

More Writers & Company illuminates the lives of such literary figures as David Grossman, the Israeli novelist (The Book of Intimate Grammar and The Yellow Wind); Edward Said, the Palestinian academic and political activist (Orientalism); Harold Bloom, the American critic (The Western Canon); Oliver Sacks, the British neurologist (Awakenings); and E.L. Doctorow, the U.S. novelist (Ragtime, Loon Lake, Billy Bathgate).

To a man, the interviews are stimulating.

Grossman, who describes himself as "an eternal outsider," discusses the Arab-Israeli conflict. Said, a Christian who acknowledges his "problematic Arab identity," tries to reconcile his mistrust of nationalism with his nationalistic credentials.

Bloom, whose combination of intellect and emotion struck Wachtel, recalls the Yiddish-speaking household in which he was raised. Sacks, whom Wachtel characterizes as a 19th century humanist, ruminates on the "far borders of human experience." Doctorow, who grew up in a secular Jewish milieu, explains that a writer must "let things happen to you to write."

Wachtel, a former Montrealer and McGill University graduate, spends about a week preparing for each one-hour interview. She works with a producer.

During the course of an average season, she reads about 50 books, fiction and non-fiction. "But I'm a slow reader, which is unfortunate," she said in an interview in a crowded restaurant near the CBC building in downtown Toronto.

Wachtel, 48, grew up "in a house without books." Nevertheless, she and her two siblings were readers, and she remembers that, as a child, her mother took her to a library by bus.

After graduating from Northmount High School, Wachtel entered McGill, where she studied English literature. She also edited the book pages of the McGill Daily and was vice-president of the McGill Literary Society.

Before settling down at the CBC, she was a freelance journalist and broadcaster. Despite the popularity of Writers & Company, Wachtel is painfully aware that cutbacks at the CBC have taken their toll of late.

"Nothing is 100 percent safe at the CBC anymore," she observed clinically. It would be a great pity if Writers & Company were to fall by the wayside.

ISRAELI DUO TO PERFORM

Violinist Vadim Gluzman, billed as one of the next great Israeli violinists, and his wife, pianist Angela Yoffe, will perform a classical recital at the Markham Theatre for the Performing Arts. The Oct. 29 recital will be hosted by Israel's Consul General in Toronto Jehudi Kinar and Markham Mayor Donald Cousens in celebration of Jerusalem 3000. Gluzman has recorded for radio and television and is acclaimed as one of the most promising young violinists of his generation. He is rapidly gaining recognition throughout the world. Yoffe has received many top prizes and is a scholarship recipient of the America-Israel Cultural Foundation. Tickets for the 7:30 p.m. recital are limited. Eye on Arts

Still The Night

Theatre Passe Muraille ushers in its new season with the world premiere of Still The Night, a new work written by and starring actor-singer Theresa Tova, with Liza Balkan. The work previews Oct. 29 and 30, and runs Oct. 31 to Nov. 24, at 16 Ryerson Ave., Toronto.

Still The Night is an intergenerational piece of musical theatre that touches on the themes of courage, friendship and survival in Nazi-occupied Poland. The story unfolds through the eyes of two Jewish girls who are forced to give up the comforts of a cosmopolitan lifestyle in pre-war Warsaw for a perilous existence of hiding, espionage and resistance with Jewish partisans in the forests of Poland.

Juxtaposing the abyss of Nazi-occupied Europe against the safety of Canada in the 1970s, Still The Night paints an intricate portrait of a family's history through song. Tova, who is a second-generation daughter of survivors of the Holocaust, presents a selection of folk and ghetto songs in their original Yiddish and in translation; she has also included some American show tunes.

"These Yiddish songs are gems," says Tova. "I wanted to bring them back to life, to recapture the vitality of a strong creative culture and community that were all but destroyed. I want to celebrate the bravery of those girls, marvel at their naive resourcefulness, sing their songs and tell their stories with pride."

Tickets $16 to $25 (previews $11) with a Sunday pay-what-you-can matinee at 2:30 p.m. 416-504-7529.

Shattering Drama: Arthur Miller, who is often called America's greatest living playwright, probes the crippling burdens of a failed marriage and the looming Holocaust on a Jewish-American couple in the 1930s in Broken Glass, a two-hour drama that airs Oct. 20 at 9 p.m., on the American PBS network.

The film adaptation of Miller's unforgettable play stars Mandy Patinkin, Henry Goodman and Margot Leicester reprising their roles from the London stage production; also starring Elizabeth McGovern. Set in Brooklyn in 1938, the story focuses on two couple confronting a literal and symbolic disability after a middle-aged Jewish woman suffers a sudden, puzzling paralysis below the waist.

Finding no physical cause for the paralysis, a doctor suspects it was possibly brought on by the woman's obsession with news of Nazi atrocities. Miller says the play was sparked by an incident from his past, when a Jewish woman in his neighborhood became inexplicably paralysed after news of Kristallnacht, the explosion of anti-Semitic violence in Nazi Germany that occurred Nov. 9 and 10, 1938.

The phenomenal growth of Sutton Group Admiral Realty is no mystery to the agents who work there. In fact, the incredible statistics this powerhouse company has been generating for nearly four years now have been getting the attention of real estate professionals all over North America.

Boasting over 50 agents and planning to bring on another 25 over the next few months, Sutton Group Admiral is one of Toronto's leading Sutton Group members. Broker/owner Murray Goldkind attributes much of the company's success to the Sutton Group concept itself. He says, "too many real estate brokers are living in the past and aren't really in touch with what today's better agents want."

Judging purely by the massive number of agents who have joined the company in the Toronto area over the past few years — more than 1,300 — the Sutton Group concept has certainly proved to be popular with agents. Goldkind says, "today's real estate professionals are tired of giving up a huge chunk of their commission to companies. And even more are tired of shelling out huge sums of money each month to companies to get a higher commission split."

But it's not just about money. ProPartners® U.S.A. & Canada, a Nevada-based group of real estate sales and management consultants, discovered in a recent survey of more than 500 agents that making more money is only one of the things agents are looking for today.

The ProPartners® survey revealed that better agents (million dollar and multi-million dollar producers) are also placing a high priority on independence, lifestyle, technology availability, marketing resources, reputation, and services. According to Jim Morton, a leading Real Estate speaker and senior partner in the group, "agents today feel they are more competent and require less hands-on attention from their Brokers, and they're becoming more resistant to traditional compensation structures." Nationally recognized marketing expert Rope Dixon, one of the founding partners of the group, concurs. "What you're seeing go on with Sutton Group is probably the most significant indication of a formal restructuring within the real estate industry in years."

Agents at Sutton Group Admiral enjoy all the independence they could ask for, and pay the company only a nominal monthly fee to retain 100% of their commissions. The system is designed to provide on-demand services to agents, in an environment that lets agents run their business as they see fit.

Murray Goldkind invites you to contact Sutton Group Admiral for all your real estate needs. "The services we provide to our agents are only a small indication of the way we treat our clients," he says. "Like our agents, we want our customers to be 100% comfortable in their search for a home."

Here Comes The Bride ..... And Groom

Before another happy couple headed for honeymoon heaven, thanks to the Jewish Singles Registry (J.S.R.) we asked the ecstatic newlyweds for their inside story. "The service the J.S.R. provides is invaluable," said the blushing bride, Franceen Rogevin as she stared lovingly at new hubby Barry Springer. "The J.S.R. provided us with an opportunity to describe what we were looking for, and with a little guidance from the J.S.R. staff, Barry and I met over a year ago. We got engaged on Valentine's Day and we have been inseparable ever since." Added Barry: "When I saw those baby blue eyes I was sunk. The Registry provided an easy non-threatening method for us to meet, and enabled me to find the person with whom I will spend the rest of my life."

INFORMATION IS KEY

The whole premise behind the Jewish Singles Registry is to provide registrants with all the information necessary to make informed and quality dating choices. Members get to view very detailed and comprehensive biography profiles on each other. Personality traits, hobbies, interests, community involvement, and even the reasons for joining the service, make up just a portion of the questionnaire. A photograph attached to each file completes the "picture". Members have been joining in record numbers, and the selection of compatible biographies has never been greater.

SEE HOW THEY OPERATE

If you have never been to a dating service before here is the perfect opportunity to do so. The Montreal office will be holding an open house on Thursday, Oct. 24th from 2-9 p.m. at 120A Cote St. Antoine. Join them for coffee and information. This is your opportunity to be pro-active, by taking matters into your own hands, and grabbing control of your love life. A Toronto open house is scheduled for November, but in the meantime private appointments are still being set up.

With winter just around the corner, there is no better time to take the initiative and find that relationship you've been seeking. Whether you are looking to meet someone for friendship, a relationship, or marriage, the time is right to sign up with the Jewish Singles Registry. They can be reached in Montreal at 514-937-2049, and in Toronto at 416-398-7068 e-mail at jsreg@accent.net.

The Inside Back

THIS RECIPE BROUGHT TO YOU BY...

HERB CAPLAN SELLS FOR LESS
1111 Weston Road (S. of Eglinton) 767-1655

APPLE CAKE WITH CARAMEL GLAZE

1 1/2 cups flour
1 1/2 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. baking soda
pinch salt
1 cup unsalted butter, softened
1 cup white sugar
2 eggs
1/2 tsp. vanilla
3 tart apples, finely chopped
3/4 cup chopped pecans

Glaze:
1 tblsp. butter
1/3 cup pecan halves
1/2 cup brown sugar
1/2 cup whipping cream

Stir together flour, cinnamon, baking soda and salt; set aside. Using electric mixer, beat butter and sugar together until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Add vanilla. Stir in flour mixture. Gently fold in apples and pecans. Transfer batter to greased, 8 1/2 in. springform pan. Bake in preheated 350°F oven 55-65 mins. or until cake tester inserted in centre comes out clean. Cool. Remove from pan.

Glaze: Melt butter over medium heat. Add nuts and cook about 3 mins. Stir in brown sugar and cream; bring to a boil. Boil gently, stirring until sugar has completely dissolved and glaze has thickened, about 5-7 mins. Pour over cooled cake, letting excess run down side.

Makes 8 servings.

Fisherman's prayers answered thanks to Dan River

By BARRY CHAMISH
Special to The CJN

JERUSALEM — Elhanan Ben Avraham moved to Israel 15 years ago fully expecting to give up his passion: fly fishing. Fortunately, he valued his fly rod too much to abandon it and it joined him in his new home.

For the past 10 years, Ben Avraham and his rod have been catching trout in the Dan River in northern Israel. "When I discovered the Dan, it was as if a prayer had been answered," he recalls.

Trout flourish in the Dan for two reasons. The first is its cold waters, fed by the snows of the Golan Heights. The second is the fish farms alongside the river that raise trout. Thousands of fingerlings escape the farms each year into the Dan and once there, the trout love it.

"It's a perfect environment for trout," explains Ben Avraham. "The river is filled with mayflies and caddis — all of them ambrosia for rainbow trout." As a result of the abundant feed, fishermen catch about a dozen trout a day and a few of the fish have grown to four kilos or more.

Fish farm began raising salmon

Recently, another of Ben Avraham's prayers was answered. A fish farm began raising salmon the year before and now the Dan is loaded with them. "Six months ago, I caught a salmon 15 centimetres long," says Ben Avraham. "Last week, I caught them 30 cms long. Within a year or two, I'll be landing salmon of two kilos." He believes the Dan River to be the hottest climate in the world for salmon fishing.

Fly fishing in the Dan River. [Jesse Reinhardt photo]

The Kibbutz Dan fish farm siphons the Dan's waters into pools that have grown trout since 1967 and salmon since 1994. The rainbows come from the United States and Australia but the origin of the salmon remains a trade secret. It's not all that simple to grow salmon in Israel and the farm tested a number of species before discovering one that liked the Dan.

As the waters of the Dan exit the farm, they accidentally carry with them a lot of fish — an estimated five percent. That's enough to fill a decent lake, say the folks at the farm.

Dan fish farm biologist Avshalom Hurvitz believes the trout, though not the salmon, are breeding in the river as he has captured trout fry much smaller than those the kibbutz raises.

The Last Word . . . RRIF DEADLINE

As autumn approaches, people age seventy-one, become more aware of the December 31st deadline for the conversion of their RRSP to a RRIF or annuity.

Sadly, the days of scanning the marketplace and finding high interest rates have passed. Today, more than ever, you must carefully plan for the orderly change from RRSP to retirement income. Planning the proper income, selecting the most appropriate investments, and making sure that all of the documentation is completed correctly and on time are all part of the RRSP conversion process.

CITY OF TORONTO

Holocaust Education Week

November 7 - 17, 1996

It is important to honour the memory of the millions of men, women and children who perished during the Holocaust. To avoid a repetition of history, it is essential that public awareness and understanding be raised about the Holocaust. Only then can we sensitize younger generations to the lessons of the Holocaust and to their responsibility for the future.

Holocaust Education Week balances remembrance and educational events that heighten our awareness of the Holocaust and its contemporary implications on racism and prejudice. Through the events organized by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, Torontonians will be able to learn about the unimaginable horrors of the past. Through education and introspection we can renew our hope for the future and prevent anti-semitism, racism and future genocide.

On behalf of my colleagues on City Council, it is a pleasure to salute the Holocaust Remembrance Committee and the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto. In recognition of their efforts to raise public awareness and curb racism and prejudice, I proclaim November 7 - 17, 1996 Holocaust Education Week.

Barbara Hall

Mayor

THE CHRISTIAN-JEWISH DIALOGUE OF TORONTO

On behalf of my colleagues in Christian-Jewish Dialogue, I invite you to participate in the rich variety of events taking place during Holocaust Education Week. Among these you will find more than a dozen programs being held in Christian churches. For sixteen years, Christian involvement in this week has been steadily growing. We do so in human solidarity and in repentance for centuries of anti-Jewish teaching, which most churches have officially repudiated in the light of the Holocaust. Such horrors must never again be answered by silence.

Christian-Jewish Dialogue (CJDT) is made up of representatives of the Anglican, Evangelical Lutheran, Roman Catholic and United Churches in Toronto along with the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews.

Through films, presentations by survivors, and dialogue, the participating churches aim not only to educate and inform but also to help us move from a tragic past to a hopeful future, one in which we can together combat the hate and prejudice that continues to plague society today. We particularly invite you to our keynote presentation on November 10th at St. Andrew's United Church. Please see details in this brochure.

Special thanks to our partners in the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto whose support and assistance have meant so much.

CHAIRPERSON'S MESSAGE

It is my pleasure to invite you to participate in the 16th Annual Holocaust Education Week. The opportunity to explore, examine and experience both history and eyewitness testimony awaits you with the wide variety of excellent programs offered this year.

As part of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, Holocaust Education Week serves to fulfil our mandate of remembrance and education. Through a plethora of stimulating topics and ideas, addressing the many interests in our community, we are succeeding in achieving our important goals. Only through remembrance and education can we ensure that the memory of those lost in the Holocaust be honoured and that the mistakes of the past not be repeated.

This year, the City of Toronto is recognizing the importance of our work by proclaiming this week as Holocaust Education Week in Toronto. It is one more giant step being taken in the furtherance of Holocaust education and its important lessons, and one more rebuke to Holocaust deniers.

BUT...it must not stop here. We must realize that Holocaust denial, the most virulent form of anti-Semitism today, will not disappear just because we wish it. Likewise, persecution, racism, and prejudice will not disappear on their own. These evils must be stopped wherever and whenever they appear. This can only happen if we are proactive. Let us apply what we learn and act to erase them from our midst.

I would like to take this opportunity to both congratulate and thank Michael Herman and Doron Opher and their outstanding committee, all volunteers, for once again organizing such an excellent event.

The Committee has done its part - now it's up to us! Let us all learn and work together to realize our goals of peace and humanity.

With warm regards,

Eleanor Getzler
Chairperson

PROGRAM CHAIRPERSONS' MESSAGE

Doron Opher

Michael Herman

We are delighted to be able to present an impressive array of events which constitute our 16th Annual Holocaust Education Week.

From modest beginnings many years ago, we have now achieved a full, rich and varied program. There are lectures, films, discussions and artistic productions being presented by leading academics, theologians and performing artists. We encourage you to read through this brochure and select the programs that fit your tastes and timetable.

We are particularly gratified to see so many new and different organizations participating in Holocaust Education Week. As well, the number of younger people involved in both organizing and attending is a healthy and important sign.

Why study the Holocaust? The pre-eminent historian, Raoul Hillberg, concluded after life-long study and reflection that in many respects the Holocaust transcends comprehension. Primo Levi, a leading Holocaust author, agrees but continues:

> "We cannot understand the Holocaust, but we can and must understand from where it springs, and we must be on our guard. If understanding is impossible, knowing is imperative, because what happened could happen again. Conscience can be seduced and obscured again - even in our consciences."

This admonition is unfortunately but manifestly apt, as evidenced by the racism, bigotry and anti-Semitism that clutter our political and social landscape.

We appreciate and are indebted to our dedicated committee members, without whom this program could not be achieved. As well, we wish to thank all the organizations who enthusiastically commit their time and resources. A special thank you to both Eleanor Getzler, Chairperson, and Pnina Zilberman, Director, of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, UJA Federation, whose guidance and hard work are vital to our continued success.

8:00 PM University of Toronto, Convocation Hall
31 King's College Circle, Toronto

GERDA W. KLEIN
and
KURT KLEIN

"All But Our Lives: Hope, The Sustaining Force"

with excerpts from "One Survivor Remembers" a documentary based on Gerda Klein's experiences, winner of the 1996 Oscar for Best Documentary.

Gerda Weissmann Klein, internationally acclaimed author, historian, columnist and speaker, deals with her past by focusing on uplifting aspects of the human condition. Her constant striving for the preservation of human rights and dignity has earned her five Doctorates of Humane Letters, along with countless other awards.

*Her autobiography "All But My Life," in print for 39 years in 36 editions, has attained the status of a classic. The book depicts her view of the dark years of the Holocaust, a progression that ultimately led to her liberation from a death march on May 7, 1945 by her future husband, U.S. Army Lieutenant Kurt Klein.*

The Kleins are the proud parents of three children and have eight grandchildren.

Sponsored by the Abraham and Ida Moncik Memorial Fund for Holocaust Education.

HOLOCAUST EDUCATION AND MEMORIAL CENTRE OF TORONTO

For more than a decade, the Holocaust Centre has been dedicated to the memory of the six million Jews murdered during twelve years of Nazi tyranny. Committed to the advancement of public awareness of the Holocaust and its lessons, it offers visitors of all ages an opportunity to share in the memory of the past and the responsibility of the future.

Since its opening, more than half a million visitors from the United States, the Caribbean, Europe, the Middle East, Asia, Australia and South Africa, including 150,000 Jewish and non-Jewish students from across Canada have visited the Centre, learning the important lessons of tolerance, understanding and acceptance.

Visitors view audio-visual presentations that portray the experiences of European Jews before, during and after World War II; see showcases containing memorabilia that enable them to witness first-hand the horror of the Holocaust; and experience the quiet and reflective Hall of Memories, where families have chosen to pay tribute to their loved ones by dedicating a tile in their memory.

School groups also have the opportunity to hear the personal testimony of one of the many Holocaust survivor speakers whose shining example of courage and dignity serves as a role model for a new generation.

The Centre has recently opened its new Holocaust Resource Centre. With its extensive library and hi-tech multi-media equipment with access to the worldwide Internet, it will further serve all segments of the community.

The Holocaust Centre is located in the Lipa Green Building, 4600 Bathurst Street, North York.

Israel wants talks with Syria

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai played good cop, bad cop last week.

Netanyahu spoke softly and urged Syrian President Hafez al-Assad to talk peace, while Mordechai warned him not to underestimate the might of the Israeli army.

"It's true that the defence establishment is monitoring with seven eyes what is occurring in Syria in case Syrian intentions do not match ours," Netanyahu said. "But our hope is that Syria understands that escalation is not good for either side and that the correct thing to do is to return to the negotiating table.

Yuval Rabin speaks out for peace

By LEORA EREN FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

JERUSALEM — You caught a glimpse of his face at the funeral. You heard him say Kaddish at his father's grave. But aside from that painfully uttered prayer, you probably never heard the voice of Yitzhak Rabin's only son. Now you are about to.

Exclusive

One year after the assassination, 41-year-old Yuval Rabin has begun to speak out.

After leading an intensely private life, he has thrown himself into the political arena, becoming a spokesperson for Dor Shalom (Peace Generation), a grassroots organization of the left. He is on the body's five-member board and is touted as its likely leader.

"Dor Shalom arose as an act of protest against the murder of my father," explains Rabin. "It's made up of young people who are not part of the political establishment. They went through much the same process that I did – but without the family dimension. It was a feeling of watching the country headed in a direction that you can't accept, and feeling that you can no longer just stay home and complain.

Free Trade bill introduced

OTTAWA — International Trade Minister Art Eggleton has introduced legislation to implement the Canada-Israel Free Trade Agreement, which was signed last summer.

Bill C-61 would remove tariffs on a variety of industrial products of Canadian and Israeli origin starting Jan. 1, 1997. Only women's swimwear – at Canada's request – and some cotton fabrics – at Israel's request – will continue to be subject to tariffs, and even those will be phased out. Duties will be eliminated or lowered on a variety of agricultural and fish products exported by both countries. Both sides have excluded dairy, poultry and egg products.

Eggleton told the Commons that Canada and Israel's "strong bonds of friendship will now be complemented by stronger economic ties."

The minister also said that Canada intends to extend the same trade benefits to the Palestinian Authority.

The News in Brief

CANADA

Arad's Disappearance

MONTREAL – Canadian Jewish Congress has expressed disappointment on the 10th anniversary of the day airman Ron Arad joined the ranks of Israeli soldiers missing in action.

It has called on the Canadian government to press authorities in Iran and Syria to repatriate all missing Israeli servicemen.

Free Trade Support

OTTAWA – Joe Volpe, parliamentary secretary to the minister of health, called on all parties and members of Parliament to support the government's legislation to establish free trade between Canada and Israel.

Pachter Honored

ST. CATHARINES – Contemporary artist, Charles Pachter, will receive an honorary doctorate at Brock University's fall convocation this month in recognition of his distinguished contribution to the arts.

Pachter has spent over 30 years exploring the complexities of the Canadian identity.

ISRAEL

Policy Protest

JERUSALEM – A group of 33 reserve soldiers and officers from elite Israel Defence Force combat units has blamed Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's policies for waning motivation to serve.

The letter published in Israeli newspapers said Netanyahu's policies were destroying "the hope of peace" and were dragging the country into an unjustified war.

Assimilation Top Threat

JERUSALEM – Assimilation is the No. 1 threat facing Jews today, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said last week at the kickoff of A Century of Zionism, marking 100 years since the first Zionist Congress in Basel, Switzerland.

The campaign of events is taking place under the banner "Zionism is about doing."

Speaking at a reception at the president's residence in Jerusalem, Netanyahu said that 100 years ago, anti-Semitism was the No. 1 problem.

Call for Clemency

JERUSALEM – An international group of scientists, lawyers and human rights activists gathered last week for a conference in Tel Aviv, where they called on Israel to release Mordechai Vanunu.

Vanunu is serving an 18-year sentence for disclosing Israel's nuclear weapons capabilities to The Times of London.

Non-confidence Vote

JERUSALEM – Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu withstood a Knesset no-confidence vote last week that was submitted by the opposition in the wake of last month's violence in theWest Bank and Gaza Strip.

Netanyahu's governing coalition defeated the motion in a vote of 55-49.

WORLD

Nazi Massacre

PUSHKIN, Russia – A ceremony was held here last week to mark the 55th anniversary of the mass murder of 600 Jews by Nazi soldiers in this small town, which is now considered to be the northernmost reach of the Holocaust.

Synagogue Bombing

BUDAPEST – A group called the Hungarian Will of Gods has taken responsibility for two bombings in Budapest near Europe's largest synagogue, according to the Hungarian daily Mai Nap.

Austrian Elections

NEW YORK – The strong showing of the far-right Freedom party last week in Austria's elections for the European Parliament was greeted ominously throughout Europe, with some warning that the party's leader could become another Hitler.

LOW POINT IN CAIRO-MOSCOW UNDERSTANDING

The fact that President Sadat of Egypt is taking his War Minister and other defence advisers with him to Moscow is seen in Jerusalem as supporting the reports that the Russians have not delivered the promised military equipment which Cairo expected.

Sources in Jerusalem are at pains to emphasize, however, that a possible slowdown in Soviet supplies does not affect Egypt's war potential. This is probably meant as a hint from the Russians to the Egyptians that they are dependent on the Kremlin's goodwill for their defence and attack capabilities.

KOSYGIN VISIT INSPIRES MASS PROTEST

Over 10,000 Jewish people from across Canada rallied in Ottawa's Strathcona Park and sang and danced through the streets, protesting the treatment of Jews in the U.S.S.R.

A human barricade of police cordoned an entire block surrounding the Soviet Embassy. There were no incidents of any kind throughout the demonstration which coincided with Soviet Premier Kosygin's visit. Cries of "Let My People Go!" could be heard blocks away.

Doctors told to stand united against cutbacks

'We can no longer subsidize health care'

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Doctors in Ontario have to present a united front if their protest against the Mike Harris government is to be effective, physicians at a United Jewish Appeal physicians division meeting agreed recently.

"If we lose this fight, we will lose our economic freedom forever," warned Dr. David Mendelssohn, a nephrologist at the Toronto Hospital, chair of the Ontario Specialists Coalition and a member of the Ontario Medical Association negotiating team.

Physicians, both specialists and family practitioners, are planning to refuse to treat new patients as of Nov. 1, a date changed from Oct. 1, to allow time for more negotiations.

The job action would not affect genuine emergency care, hospital care or treatment of those already on a doctor's patient list.

Deciding what constitutes an emergency would rest with the resident or physician on call in a hospital emergency ward, or with the family physician, who is assumed to be the entry point to the health care system.

Mendelssohn described the efforts over the years to find a solution to the doctors' ongoing battles with successive governments over compensation — battles he described as "a history of three governments and broken promises."

The Liberal, NDP and Conservative governments have consistently broken all their agreements with the physicians, he charged, including placing caps on fees, instituting programs and committing to a contract.

"Ontario is the only province where the doctors work without a contract," Mendelsohhn pointed out.

Physicians, he asserted, "can no longer subsidize health care [in Ontario]," he said.

Obstetricians struck the first blow against government policies when the government refused to subsidize malpractice insurance.

(Obstetricians are considered especially vulnerable to malpractice suits because of the many things that can go wrong in the course of labor and delivery. As a result, their insurance premiums are especially high.)

Many have simply refused to deliver babies, except in high-risk situations.

Obstetricians were joined by orthopedic surgeons, Mendelssohn said, and other specialists felt that their colleagues "should not be left in the lurch."

The government must recognize that the number of patients and the demands on the health care system are increasing, and that doctors are forced to see an increasing number of patients, not just to maintain their income, but because of demand.

"Doctors are no longer willing to work for free," he said.

In the event of the job action, he urged doctors to cooperate with each other, to even out the patient load and especially, to support the action.

During the question period, the physicians' resentment was clear. Speaker after speaker objected to the cap on income, the fact that when extra-billing was banned nothing concrete was put in place as a substitute, and especially, what they consider the untrustworthiness of successive governments.

Several asked what the point of the job action was, when the government could not be trusted to implement any concessions.

A suggestion for a system of co-payment or private funding drew some support, although former OMA president Michael Wyman noted that recent polls showed the public was adamantly opposed to such a system.

Mendelssohn asked for a show of hands as to how many would support a complete withdrawal of services. Less than a handful agreed, although there was almost complete agreement about withdrawal of services to new patients.

(As the paper went to press, the government and OMA negotiators announced a tentative agreement, which will be presented to the physicians for ratification next week.

The agreement reduces fee clawbacks, but also prevents new doctors from practising in what the government considers over-serviced areas.

The agreement is contingent upon all service withdrawal and cutbacks being stopped.)

Hospital restructuring 'chaotic' conference told

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Widespread restructuring involving hospital and bed closures has led to shorter hospital stays, a trend that can have serious consequences, particularly for the elderly.

A conference titled Getting Out of Hospital: The Long Road Home recently addressed that issue in order to assist community agencies and families struggling to meet patients' needs for post-hospital care.

More than 300 health care providers, community service organizations and seniors' advocacy groups from across Ontario attended the one-day session at Holy Blossom Temple.

Case study dramatizations, presentations by medical, social work and community experts, and round-table discussions identified problems confronting caregivers and the frustration felt by those on the receiving end.

Ethel Meade, a member of the Task Force on Transitional Care, an advocacy coalition that has lobbied for provision of intermediate care for seniors discharged from hospitals before they are well enough to care for themselves, said the goal of the conference was to generate creative strategies to cope with the situation.

She said the coalition was formed 2½ years ago after a wom-

Quebec Jews seek solidarity

At the corner of Victoria and Cote Ste Catherine in Montreal are the offices of the Communauté Sépharade du Québec (CSQ), a two-storey brown brick building which sits in full sunlight, absorbing the energy of the day, as the sun moves across the sky.

During my visit last week to Montreal, I had occasion to go the offices of the CSQ and to meet with the officers: president Maryse Ohayon, director general James Dahan, director of public relations Elie Benchétrit, and the editor of La Voix Sépharade, Judah Castiel. I had met formally with the leaders of the CSQ last year and it was important to visit again. We had much to talk about.

I wanted my CSQ hosts to know that in my ongoing effort to extend the reach, the breadth and the readership of The CJN, I place a high priority on French language news reporting and feature writing in Montreal.

The CSQ is commemorating its 30th year. It is the "inheritor" of the Association sépharade francophone (ASF) which was founded in 1966 and whose first major achievement was the establishment of l'Ecole Maimonide, the first Jewish French-language day school in Canada.

Though the history of the CSQ is relatively recent, that of the Sephardim in Quebec is not. The first Jewish immigrants to Canada in the 18th century, were in fact, Sephardim. And as I have written previously on this page, the oldest synagogue in Canada is the Spanish and Portuguese Shearith Israel of Montreal, founded in 1768.

Today, more than 25,000 Sephardi Jews live in Montreal, the vast majority of whom arrived in Quebec in the mid 1950s from Iran, Lebanon, Iraq, Israel and North Africa.

To mark the CSQ's 30th anniversary, a gala celebration is planned for Dec. 1 at the Shaar Hashomayim.

On the question of Quebec's separation from Canada, the Jewish community in Quebec is undivided. Like the overall Jewish community of which it is a flourishing and integral part, the Sephardi community is overwhelmingly federalist and anti-separatist.

Given the united position of the community on the possibility of Quebec separation, it was particularly unfortunate and regrettable that the editorial in the Sept. 11 issue of The Suburban, a weekly tabloid in west-end Montreal, tried to drive a wedge between the Sephardi and the non-Sephardi Jewish communities.

In an attack against the Canadian Jewish Congress' (CJC) handling of the "matzahgate" affair, the editorial writer bifurcated the Jewish community into the majority who are English speaking and the minority who are not. His attack against the CJC was direct; his bifurcation of the community, however, was indirect and thus insidious.

"It [the CJC] has always advocated cooperation with those hostile to most of its [the CJC's] constituents' existence as English speakers and to the existence of other anglophones allied to the Jewish community...

"Of course, the French speaking Sephardi community favors cooperation and there is an understandable reluctance to take a position that might divide the community. But there comes a point when one must act in the majority interest, in this case the majority Jewish interest." (My emphasis)

Setting aside the merits, if any, of the writer's accusations against both the CJC and the Sephardi community, it was unconscionable for him to differentiate the interests of the majority English speaking from the minority French speaking Jews. In the struggle to save Canada, their interests are one and the same, indivisible, as has been stated and restated publicly countless times.

Despite the efforts of some, the Sephardi community will not so easily, so cavalierly, be cut away from the overall Jewish community. Nor will the CJC from the Sephardi community.

The experience these days of the Jewish community in Montreal is, emotionally, probably the Diaspora experience that is the closest equivalent to the emotional experience of the Jewish community in Israel. I am not equating the two existential or geopolitical situations in any manner whatsoever. The search for political stability within a united Canada, though important and worthy of our preoccupation, is not nearly as fraught with the history, the metaphysics or the life-and-death implications as is the search for peace and security in the Middle East.

Nevertheless, I do wish to point out that, as in Israel, the Jews of Quebec are constantly tuned into, constantly reacting to, constantly assessing and constantly debating political developments. And, as in Israel, wherever and whenever Jews gather in groups of two or more, they engage in animated discussion. Usually, the first topic of discussion is "the situation." The "situation" of course, refers to the altered, uneasy atmosphere felt here since the referendum last year.

Everyone bears within him a small but disquieting inner agitation, like a loved one's worry that cannot quite be relieved, permitting the soul only occasional rest, and placing it, thus, in a state of permanent fatigue.

But, like its counterpart in Israel, the community in Quebec is hardy, determined to live a thriving, diverse, highly organized life, albeit with their social and political antennae fully engaged. And, again, like its counterpart in Israel, the community in Quebec requires of the rest of Canada's Jews two things: understanding and solidarity. MBD

Ukrainian Jewish community dying: shaliach

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The once-mighty Jewish community of Ukraine is dying, says the head of the Jewish Agency for Israel's office in that country.

Fully 65 percent of Jews leaving Ukraine are under 25, and over one-third still in the country are over 65, says Joseph Traupiansky, who also heads the Jewish Agency's operations in the neighboring former Soviet republic of Moldova.

"Jewish life is coming to an end in Ukraine," Traupiansky told The CJN during a recent stopover in Toronto, where he addressed community leaders on the fate of Ukrainian Jewry. "I never met a Jew who doesn't want to leave."

There are seven direct flights to Israel leaving Ukrainian cities every week, and each is packed, Traupiansky said. The Agency operates in Kiev, Odessa, Lvov, Kharkov and Dnepropetrovsk, and employs a staff of 26 to teach Hebrew, Jewish culture and traditions, and run youth programs.

Apart from helping to prepare Jews depart, the agency's mandate, Traupiansky says, is nothing less than "to save the Jewish people."

Some 2,000 Jews continue to flee Ukraine every month, leaving behind a community of roughly 375,000 — a dramatic drop from the half-million or so who lived there when the republic achieved independence from Moscow in late 1991. About half go to Israel; Traupiansky calls it "the new exodus."

The reason Jews are leaving is the same one cited by the roughly six million Ukrainians (Traupiansky says that's the government's own estimate) who say they want out: economic and social chaos.

"Things are very unstable. It's a big crisis there." The day will come, he said, when the Jewish population will level off at between 30,000 and 50,000.

Wire service stories from Ukraine last week reported that most Jews are going to emigrate, and that those who will stay are likely to assimilate. Pensioners make up 60 percent of Jews in small communities, the reports said.

Joseph Traupiansky

Anti-Semitism no longer plays a role in the decision to leave, Traupiansky believes. The Jewish community's relations with the government are "good," and anti-Semitism exists "only on the street."

The same holds true, he points out, in Moldova, a small landlocked country between Ukraine and Romania. Over 70,000 Jews have left since independence, leaving between 30,000 and 40,000 behind. There's one direct flight a week to Israel from the capital, Kishinev, and it too is always full.

Traupiansky, 65, is a pioneer of the Jewish Agency, having opened the organization's first office in the Soviet Union, in the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius in late 1989. That was two years before the country collapsed and things were a lot riskier then. But one measure of how far the agency has come is that it now has offices in 140 cities in the former Soviet Union.

In Russia, the agency is still working to regain its accreditation, which Moscow abruptly cancelled last April.

Reaction low-key to Star stories

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Reaction in Jewish circles has been low-key to recent Toronto Star articles detailing controversial Canadian charitable donations to Jewish settlers in Israel's territories.

As of last week, the Star had received just five complaints about the stories, written by the paper's Middle East correspondent, Martin Regg Cohn.

But, stressed Star ombudsman Don Sellar, "I don't measure the severity of complaints by the number of telephone calls I get."

Cohn's investigation claimed that Canadian donors are funneling millions of dollars to Jewish settlements in the West Bank, Gaza Strip and Golan Heights, areas over which the Canadian government has never recognized Israel's authority.

The stories stressed that it's not illegal for Canadians to send money to the territories — only to claim it as a tax-deductible charitable donation, and if charities issue tax receipts.

The stories pointed out that Ottawa and most other governments regard Jewish settlements in lands captured by Israel in the 1967 war as obstacles to peace and "contrary to international law." Thus, according to the Star, Canadian law says a registered charity cannot operate against stated public policy.

The Star devoted a large amount of space — 108 column inches — to the stories, spread over three days.

Of the five calls of complaint, Sellar said, one accused the Star of showing a consistent anti-Israel bias; another said he was glad to have cancelled his subscription; one pointed out that they should be refered to as "Israeli settlements," not "Jewish settlements;" and one said the stories seemed to imply there is something wrong with sending money to settlements across the Green Line.

"There was not heavy reaction. It was very light," Sellar said.

He said "it's a fact" the Star features Mideast news prominently because of "high reader interest."

As well, "foreign correspondents try to write about things that are relevant back home."

Sellar stressed he works at arm's length from the paper.

Bernie Farber of Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, said he received two calls of complaint, while B'nai Brith Canada reported none.

The stories reflected the Star's "consistent and regretable bias when it comes to Israel," remarked Moshe Ronen, chair of Congress's Ontario region.

Meridor set to address Israel Bonds conference

TORONTO – Israeli Finance Minister Dan Meridor will be the keynote speaker at the State of Israel Bonds Fall Leadership Conference at the Four Seasons on Oct. 27 and Oct 28.

He will be speaking at the Jerusalem 3000 tribute dinner honoring the George A. Cohon family on Sunday evening.

A panel of Israeli experts including Dan Gilerman, chair of the Federation of Israeli Chambers of Commerce; Dan Proper, CEO of the Osem Group; and Raffi Sadeh, vice-president of the Israel Hotel Association, will speak on Oct. 27 at 2 p.m. at an event which is free and open to the general public.

One of the highlights of Monday's agenda is a breakfast briefing with John Loftus, the former prosecutor of the Nazi War Crimes Unit, U.S. Justice Department and the author of The Secret War Against the Jews.

Scheduled to speak at a testimonial luncheon in honor of Dr. Ruhama Goldstein, who has served for the past three years as chair of Israel Bonds' North American Women's Division, is Gerda Weissman Klein, subject of the Oscar winning documentary One Survivor Remembers.

Also addressing delegates will be International Trade Minister Arthur Eggleton.

Reject Bisaillon

The government of Quebec last week received a report from a 13-member panel chaired by Robert Bisaillon calling for the gradual reduction of the subsidies it presently gives to private schools for the general studies component of their programs. Indeed the commission chair has publicly stated that he favors the total elimination of the subsidies.

The minister of education, Pauline Marois, will now deliberate upon Bisaillon's recommendations. And while she does, the Jewish community in Quebec will be holding its breath.

At present, approximately 7,000 students are enrolled in 22 Jewish day schools in Montreal. The system is regarded as among the best anywhere in the Diaspora. One need not be a prophet to foresee a severe decline in student enrolment should the cost of education increase to the degree it inevitably must without public funding.

It is hard to understand the logic of the commission's recommendations.

If the aim is to save money, as the report claims, the commission's recommendations will wind up costing the province more money. The subsidy per student given to the private schools amounts to approximately half of the cost of educating a student in the public schools. If the subsidy is reduced or eliminated, it stand to reason that a large number of the students currently enrolled in private schools will be forced to leave. Most if not all of them will find their way into the public school system at twice the cost per child that the public is spending on them now.

If the aim is to require private school parents to shoulder more of the burden in educating children with special needs, as the report claims, the commission's recommendations will achieve the opposite result. By significantly increasing the cost of private school education, the majority of the parents of children with special needs will simply remove their children from the private schools and place them instead, in the public schools. Again, the ultimate cost to the taxpayer will increase.

If the aim is to achieve a "fairer, more democratic and egalitarian society" as the report claims, the commission's recommendations will have missed the mark by a wide and dispiriting margin. They will achieve a society which is more secular, in which the rights of minority communities to fully embrace, practise and teach their religious beliefs will be diminished. Is this "fairer" to the minorities?

They will achieve a society in which the minorities are deprived of a privilege that has been conferred on them for decades, a privilege which has been one of the key instruments in enhancing their sense of belonging and participation in the greater society. Is this more "democratic"?

They will achieve a society in which religious education is rendered unaffordable for the majority of those who seek it for their children, in which the ability of the minority communities to transmit their traditions and the pathways of their heritage to the next generation is severely restricted. Is this more "egalitarian" to the minorities?

Though holding its breath, the Jewish community is not standing still. The Association of Jewish Day Schools has already mobilized to attempt to persuade the government not to reduce its funding to the private schools.

The Bisaillon recommendations will not achieve the financial or social aims which purport to be their objective. Moreover, a decision to reduce, let alone eliminate, assistance to the private schools, would send an electric jolt through a social and political atmosphere already charged with feelings of vulnerability and suspicion on the part of the minorities.

We therefore urge the govement of Quebec to reject the Bisaillon recommendations.

La Presse denies Galganov's allegation

In perusing the Sept. 26 edition of your newspaper, I was greatly surprised to have read, in the article entitled "We're fighting for national unity," statements made by Mr. Howard Galganov which characterize the attitude of La Presse and of its journalist, Mr. Gilles Paquin, as being "anti-Semitic" and as a "form of intimidation."

Those statements are serious and gratuitous accusations, without merit whatsoever, and cause undue prejudice both to La Presse and its journalist, Mr. Gilles Paquin.

La Presse has never written, nor has ever intended to suggest, that there are different classes of Quebecers based on ethnic, religious or cultural origin.

Out of fairness and for the sake of professional ethic, I would greatly appreciate it if you would publish the present letter and indicate publicly that you distance yourself from Mr. Galganov's statements.

World media biased against Jews and Israel

In his book The New Middle East, Shimon Peres appears to dismiss the book of Ecclesiastes, which states: "Whatever has been is what will be, and whatever has been done is what will be."

That being said, I cannot resist comparing the media's treatment in the 1930s and 1940s when reporting about the Jews, with that of today. Back then, the media engaged in suppressing, ignoring, doubting and questioning the news that came from Europe with respect to the persecution of the Jews. Prof. Deborah E. Lipstadt, in her painstakingly documented book Beyond Belief describes in minute detail the distortion and cover-up engaged in by the media in the United States at the time, thereby minimizing any sympathy for the Jews. Only after the magnitude of the disaster became obvious, did the truth finally surface.

The media treatment Israel has received is not very different from the above. The last 50 years have witnessed continuous Arab aggression against Israel by military, economic and political means. While the Jewish state has irrigated the desert, absorbed millions of new immigrants and developed economically, it has nonetheless remained the pariah country of the globe (count the number of United Nations resolutions). Throughout this period, the media has again filtered information to reflect Israel in the worst possible light while omitting its remarkable achievements.

Rebirth of Israel at right time

I recently read the excellent book by Bernard Wasserstein entitled Vanishing Diaspora. The changes in world Jewry have been significant in the last 60 years, and will more than likely continue to be significant for at least the next 40 years.

In 1940 as the horrors of the Holocaust were becoming reality, Europe still had close to 10 million Jews and was the cultural centre of world Jewry. Due to the Holocaust, emigration, the effects of assimilation and low birth rates, the European Jewish population could fall below one million by the year 2040.

North America's and South America's Jewish population is also decreasing at a rapid pace (mostly due to assimilation and low birth rates). In the near future, the Jewish population could decrease by 50 percent if current trends continue. For the most part, the Jews left will live in large cities and tend to be more observant. As for the relatively few Diaspora Jews in Asia, Africa and Australia, their number will also show further decline in the years to come.

There is one bright spot and only one real hope for continued Jewish survival. The State of Israel, which only had half a million Jews in 1940 (then Palestine), now is quickly becoming the country with the largest Jewish population (overtaking the United States). With continued immigration and high birth rates, Israel's population could reach the 10 million mark by the year 2040 (with 75 percent of the population being Jewish). Due to both external and internal reasons, the decline of the Diaspora Jews is occurring at an alarming rate. Thankfully the rebirth of the State of Israel has just begun.

Kolomyya not in Bukovina

Just a minor geographic correction. It may indeed be a long journey from Kolomyya to Toronto (CJN, Oct. 3), but Kolomyya is not, and never was, in the Bukovina. Rather, Kolomyya (also spelled Kolomyja and Kolomiya) is on the Galician side of the border between Bukovina and Galicia, both these provinces having been before World War I part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. After the war, Bukovina came under Romanian rule, while Galicia became part of Poland.

Perspectives

Rhapsodizing over Zion's landscape

By NAOMI BELL

Anu Nih'yeh Harishonim.
We will be the first, we will be the builders.
We will plant trees on the rocks, on the hills and in the valleys.
We will pave roads; our hammers will ring out with song.
Awake, chalutz, and get to work!

So sang the chalutzim, the pioneers of modern Israel. While their story is well documented in history books and personal memoirs, a vivid portrait can also be drawn from the songs they sang. Through a careful examination of the texts, it is possible to gain insight into the hopes and dreams of these young activists, their struggles and accomplishments and the ideals that propelled them.

The late 19th century was a time of rising nationalism throughout Europe, when people turned to their past history and folkways in their passion for self-determination. The Haskala, the movement of modern Jewish enlightenment, had a profound influence on Zionist expression. With its revival of Hebrew as a modern literary language and its depiction of the glories of ancient Palestine, it evoked a chain of historic associations and inspired young people to return to the land of their ancestors. When the chovevei Tziyon — lovers of Zion met in their small groups, they sang songs of wistful yearning and proud determination. They rhapsodized over the beautiful landscape they had never seen and dreamed of a utopian existence in Zion.

Many of the early Zionist songs were in Yiddish, the language of daily discourse for Jews in the Russian Pale of Settlement. For the most part, these Yiddish songs were sad and wistful, mourning the loss of Zion in ancient history and dreaming of a return to the Holy Land.

The beloved folk poet Mark Warshawski wrote a touching song about an old man who dreams of Zion, but has no hope of reaching it himself. It epitomizes the gentle, wistful tone of the early Zion songs.

Hounded and driven from my home, with a wound in my heart, I remain alone, without family or friend. Everyone has dispersed, one here and one there and, in twilight of my years, I sing a song of Zion
Zion, Zion, what a wonderful name!
Zion, Zion, what a holy word!
Old trees, beautiful flowers, grow in your holy land.
Great God, please grant that I may kiss your earth some day.
If I am worthy, let me kneel beside the graves and weep at the ancient Wall.
But I am old and poor, and will never live to see Zion!

The year 1882 brought the first mass exodus of Russian Jews to Palestine. Although most of the 7,000 Jews of the first aliyah were victims of czarist oppression, several hundred were also chovevei Tziyon, and already imbued with the ideal of return and rebuilding. Avigdor Hameiri's famous Hebrew poem about Jerusalem captured the feelings of the early Zionists, who saw themselves as wanderers who have finally come home. It remained the most beloved song about Jerusalem until 1967, when it was replaced in popularity by Naomi Shemer's Yerushalayim Shel Zahav.

Pioneers preparing to drain swamps on Kibbutz Amir north of Lake Kinneret. Photo excerpted from Israel: Images & Ideas, Viewfinder Publications, New York, 1988.

From the top of Mount Scopus I bow down to you. Shalom, O Jerusalem. For 100 generations have I dreamed of you and yearned to behold the light of your countenance. Thousands of exiles from the ends of the world raise their eyes to you, temple of the Lord, royal city! Jerusalem, Jerusalem, shine your countenance upon your son! From your ruins shall I rebuild you! I shall not move from here!

In the Russian Pale of Settlement, Jews had been barred from working on the land. They were tradespeople or merchants, or scholars removed from the concerns of everyday life. The hard labor of digging and ploughing and working by the sweat of one's brow was not part of their life experience.

In the late 19th century, however, physical labor and cultivation of the land became central to Zionist philosophy. One of the first songs to express this new attitude to labor was Di Soche — The Plough, by Eliakum Zunser. This song had such an impact on the chovevei Tziyon that, upon arrival in Eretz Yisrael, they translated it into Hebrew (M'machrashti).

In the plough lies redemption, the joy of life.
As a worker I lack for nothing.
I don't need to borrow or worry about my livelihood.
All my needs are cared for, and I stand free in God's world.
Who can compare with me in wealth?
Who lives as happily as I, a toiler in the field?

The first decades of the 20th century saw the emergence of a new kind of immigrant to Palestine, highly disciplined and filled with burning ideals and determination. For the members of the second and third aliyot, physical labor was the very essence of their philosophy. Avoda, the creed of physical labor and self-reliance became their new religion and they set about to rebuild their ancient homeland with single-minded zeal and unswerving dedication. For these chalutzim (pioneers) the words of Chaim Nachman Bialik became almost a credo.

Who will save us from hunger and give us bread to eat and milk to drink?
Who will protect us from the cold and give us light in the darkness?
Who will bring water from the wells, and plant trees for fruit and shade?
Whom shall we thank? To whom shall we give blessing?
To labor, and the toil of our own hands!
(Shir Ha'avoda)

The young men and women who flocked to Palestine were overwhelmed by the beauty of the landscape. They came for the most part from crowded cities and towns and, although they had read about their ancient homeland in the Bible and in modern poetry, nothing could have prepared them for the glories of nature they encountered. In hundreds of songs they celebrated the beauty of the landscape: the Emek and the Galil, Lake Kinneret and the Jordan River, mountains and desert, all were eulogized. The songs are filled with an overwhelming love of homeland, and a few short examples can only hint at their passion and beauty.

Kacha, Kach: So were you then and so today, O Bashan, Gilead, Kinneret. O hills and valleys of Zion, I would not have you otherwise. I sing of you by day, by night, in joy and in sorrow. I have betrothed myself to you in tears. I am yours forever!

Laila Pele: A thousand and one nights have I given to my little country, but my gift is not enough for her. A thousand and one wonders my little country has given me, in every mountain and in every rock. O, night of wonder, wondrous night, my reward is my homeland!

M'chorati: My homeland: the din of the waves in the sea, and the shadow of hills. The call of the jackal, slumbering groves, and the song of the flute at midnight. O, my homeland!

Hagalila: Come, brothers, to the mountains, on to Galilee! Though it be still desolate and malaria-ridden, let us proceed without fear. We shall make the Galil live again!

The chalutzim faced unspeakable hardship in their new land: labor in blazing sun with little to drink, hunger bordering on starvation, debilitating bouts of malaria or blinding by trachoma. At night the wolves and jackals howled and scorpions and tiny reptiles scurried through the walls. The settlers also had to face the threat of Arab marauders who sneaked into the sleeping settlements at night to rob or murder.

Given the horrendous hardship of life in Palestine, one would expect an outpouring of songs of complaint and even despair. It is, therefore, remarkable that there are practically no songs of complaint to be found in collections of early Israeli folksongs — only songs of triumph and achievement and determined optimism. Even more remarkably the pronoun ani — I — is rarely to be found. The collective pronoun anachnu — we — has swallowed up the singular, just as the pain of the individual has been submerged in the values and ideals of the group. In a rare outpouring of despair, we hear:

My coat is torn and there is no place to live, and nothing to wear.
My spirit is agitated, and my heart is wounded and bleeding.
Pray tell me, my companion, what is all this for, and why?
Once there was hope — now it is muted, and my soul trembles with cold.
Tell me, my friend, what is the meaning of of the word "homeland?"

Much more common are songs of hope and determination, urging the chalutzim not to give up in the face of hardship — to continue their labor and rebuild the land.

Hoi bachur, O young man from the settlements of Jezreel, it's hard for you to drain the swamps and clear the stones. O young man from the settlements of Jezreel, don't fall, carry on. The fields are parched, there is no grass for the cows and horses. If the first rain or the last rain (yoreh and malkosh) are late, work again and plough again.

The story of the chalutzim is conveyed in hundreds of songs that tell of struggle and achievement, courage and determination, and an overwhelming love of homeland. They reflect the history of a country and lay bare the psyche of the men and women who labored to rebuild it. It seems appropriate to end this brief survey with a song that celebrates the energy and idealism of the youthful pioneers of modern Israel.

Shirat Hano'ar — the song of youth, the song of our future. The song of renewal, building and aliyah. From the gola (exile) our brothers will stream; Our homeland has come to life! Who has created this wonder, O homeland? Who has established all these, O homeland? It is your hand that plants, your hand that sows. As long as we have the youth in our homeland, the dream of the people of Israel will indeed be realized!

Opinions

'Judaizing' is a loaded word

By Enid Zuckenheim

I suppose we all agree that this has been a bad month for the peace process, but beyond that, agreement stops and the finger-pointing starts. The Arabs blame Israel, and Israel the Arabs; Jews "left" and "right," egged on by the previous and the present Israel government, blame each other, and the whole world and its media all blame Israel.

I won't say anything on the last point for, in his usual superb way, the columnist Charles Krauthammer has said it all: the world's media have perpetrated a "desecration of the Truth." (Time, Oct. 14.) Thus, for example, National Public Radio (NPR) reports the Palestinian claim that the tunnel opening "threatens the stability of the al-Aksa mosque." ("For balance," Krauthammer adds sarcastically, NPR might add, "The Jews deny this.") But the "claim" is totally false, for the tunnel is several hundred metres away from any Muslim holy place, and close only to the Jewish holy place, the Western Wall. In claiming a Jewish "crime against our religious and holy places," Arafat falsely inflamed that most dangerous of passions, the religious, and that herd of independent thinkers, the world's journalists, let him get away with it.

I want no finger-pointing of my own but rather damage control, and the damage to control is Jews pointing fingers at each other. This was a bad time, the critics say, for opening the tunnel, and thus opening up the question of Jerusalem. But what, pray, would be a good time? We Canadians ought to know, for when former prime minister Joe Clark electioneered on the slogan "Next year in Jerusalem" (for our embassy) and got elected, the outcry, mostly Arab, obviously carefully planned, was such that he beat a hasty retreat.

The Rabin-Peres government postponed the Jerusalem problem to the end of the peace process, but would it be any easier then, for a Labor government, a Likud government, any Israeli government? And, since the issue is not (as the media keep saying) "Arab Jerusalem" but rather the Old City, with its holy places, Muslim, Christian and Jewish, what of Diaspora Jewry? After two millennia, we managed to return to Jerusalem: shall we, just then, stop praying for her, for just then she stopped being Jewish, for we gave her away? Clearly, whenever Jerusalem will come up in the peace process, all Jewry is involved.

Jewish unity is, therefore, vital and at this stage, I think it can be achieved on at least one point, a small one it may seem, but not small after all. Arafat has accused the government of trying to "Judaize" Jerusalem, and that word, like "Nigger," should be wiped out from the dictionary, loaded as it has been with anti-Jewish feelings for centuries. Are Muslims trying to "Islamize" the Old City? In claiming her as the capital for his state, is Arafat trying to "Palestinize" Jerusalem? Nobody would dream of using these expressions. But "Judaizing" suggests something nefarious, a plot, even of controlling the world from a "Judaized" Jerusalem.

Of course, just ostracizing the word won't ostracize the thought, just as ostracizing "Nigger" does not end racism. But it is something. And none of us — right, left or indifferent — should tolerate the word from anyone, Arafat, the media, the United Nations, our next door neighbors.

That word doesn't mean much in America, but it means a lot in Europe; for ever since Jews got emancipated, their participation in the native culture has been accused of "Judaizing" it. One therefore feels dubious about the recent European eagerness to participate in the peace process.

As per Oslo, no foreign policy is to be conducted in Orient House, the Palestinian headquarters in Jerusalem, but when, led by Irish Foreign Minister Dick Spring, a European delegation came last time — and this under the "soft" Labor government — they ignored that provision, snubbed the government, and in turn were snubbed by President Ezer Weizman. Now Spring is to come again. After his Orient House visit last time, he promised "even-handedness" about Jerusalem. Did he mean, some forward reporter should ask him when he comes again, that "even-handedness" means stopping the Jews from "Judaizing" Jerusalem?

Exports of Hebrew literature booming

By Carl Alpert

Quiz question: List important Israeli exports. Answer: chemicals from the Dead Sea, hi-tech equipment, citrus, polished and cut diamonds, armaments, pharmaceuticals, textiles, flowers ...

Correct, and the list can be extended even more. But few would think of including what may sound like an unusual commodity — Hebrew literature in translation. Of course, the Bible constitutes a splendid tradition in this field, but here I am referring to modern literary works.

In recent years, the best of Israel's original Hebrew literature has been translated into no less than 46 languages, including all the major European tongues, as well as languages such as Hindi, Mongolian, Tamil, Turkish and Welsh. Chinese, Japanese and Korean are also on the list.

Quite aside from the economic benefits which Israel derives from these exports (income in the millions of dollars) is the public relations value, the goodwill and positive image promoted among the millions of readers in all parts of the world. Arabic is not missing from the list, and several Israeli authors have a good following in Egypt, Jordan and Algeria.

The most translated Hebrew authors are Yehuda Amichai, whose poetry has been made available in 30 languages, and novelists Amos Oz, 28 languages; A. B. Yehoshua, 22; Aharon Appelfeld, 18; Yoram Kaniuk and David Grossman, 17 each.

The big boom has been in Europe. In the past five years, at least 440 titles of Hebrew literature, including poetry, prose, drama, anthologies and literature for children have been rendered into one or more of the 25 European tongues — triple the number of titles published from 1975 to 1979.

China constitutes one of the latest breakthroughs, with some 40 Hebrew books on the list. One enthusiastic publisher there, discovering the sales possibilities in his country (population one billion) for quality Hebrew literature, placed an immediate order for nine books in one year. He was told, however, that competent translators from Hebrew into Chinese were not readily available and he finally grudgingly agreed to take three books the first year.

This remarkable development is the result of painstaking promotion undertaken by a little-known body called the Institute for the Translation of Hebrew Literature. Founded in 1962, it serves in effect as a literary agency. Its experts carefully survey new books as they come off the press here, select the best for translation and offer the works to publishers abroad. Since there is a reputation to maintain, only the very best are chosen.

Foreign publishers were at first not easily convinced that an interesting Hebrew novel or children's book would necessarily have any appeal to readers in their countries. But first experiments were successful and repeat orders began to come in.

No matter what their content, novels by Oz and Yehoshua seem to have universal appeal and are assured of foreign sales from the beginning. The institute does not deal with non-fiction, most of which is handled through academic circles.

The institute's task is not finished when rights are sold to a foreign publisher. Literary critics in the overseas press are cultivated and their attention is called to the appearance of new works, with special reference to success already achieved by these books in other countries.

Twice a year, a journal is published in English, with book reviews, excerpted translations and scholarly studies of trends in Hebrew literature.

There are remote lands in the world where Israel is known more for its modern literature than for its political difficulties with its neighbors.

Do you have any friends who read Afrikaans, Bulgarian, Flemish, Serbo-Croatian, Esperanto or Urhobo? You can safely recommend a good Hebrew book.

Nazism's propagandist

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

On the morning when the news media were filled with reports over bloody battles between Palestinians and Israelis, I happened to read the latest issue of the New York Review of Books. That oversized publication contains the most detailed book reviews published anywhere in the world — outsizing the New York Times supplement, Books in Review.

It so happened that the Sept. 19 edition of the magazine contained various reviews of books that touched on Jews. One dealt with Louis Farrakhan, another with the 1958 bomb attack on an Atlanta temple (on which I wrote recently in this column), and still another with a new biography of Joseph Goebbels written by David Irving. If Hitler was the century's most evil genius, Goebbels ran him a close second. In fact, there are many historians who believe that without Goebbels, the German fascination with Hitler would not have lasted as long as it did.

I saw the little, slightly deformed man several times in Berlin's Lustgarten and of course heard him often on radio. Where Hitler was pure emotion, Goebbels managed to spice his incendiary talk with intellectual morsels. He was literate, wrote well and filled his role as propaganda minister with devastating brilliance.

So, when I saw that Irving had written the little devil's biography, I wondered whether the author would try to exonerate him as he had Hitler. You will remember that Irving is the "scholar" who tried to show that Jews were never gassed in places like Auschwitz.

Now, in this book, Irving lets the genie out of the bottle. According to the author, it was Goebbels, rather than Hitler, who was the unrelenting enemy of the Jews.

What was life like in Berlin during the years of Goebbels' reign in the city? (He had been appointed Gauleiter, or district chief, of the capital city.) Irving describes what it was like for Jews to live under Goebbels:

"They were forced to give up their personal property, denied the right to travel in autobuses, or to be seated in trams, or to own or drive automobiles, or to buy tobacco, or to have telephone or radios. Nor could they use public libraries, visit museums, go to concerts, have their hair cut at barber's, own pets, or, when rationing began, have the same rations as the Germans. The list of prohibitions was endless."

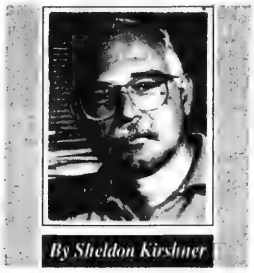
Goebbels was also the man who was responsible for the introduction of the yellow badge that Jews had to wear from 1941 on, and he was the inventor of the Nazi "doublespeak." His propaganda managed to cover up details of cruelty and murder, by using cover words like "wandering off" for execution or "final solution" for the extermination of the Jews.

Of course, Irving does not rank as a reliable historian, but he does afford glimpses of the man who, in intelligence and literary savvy, towered over his cohorts and was thus doubly dangerous.

It seems to me that whenever I want to let go of these memories, along comes a book like this to stir them up again.

The Kirshner File

Jewish filmmakers face various problems



By Sheldon Kirshner

In recent years, there has been a renaissance of interest in films with Jewish themes. I am not talking about Hollywood movies such as Schindler's List, which has enjoyed enormous success far and wide. I am referring to the plethora of Jewish/Yiddish film festivals which have sprung up in such disparate places as Toronto, San Francisco, Moscow and Madrid and to the inclusion of Jewish-content films at major film festivals.

At the recent Toronto International Film Festival, this was the topic at a symposium entitled What is the Current State of Jewish Film and Where it it Going? For reasons best known to themselves, the participant largely skirted the question. They did, however, shed light on some of the problems professionals like themselves constantly face in the making of documentary films with Jewish themes.

Edward Rosenstein, producer of A Tickle in the Heart, a delightful profile of three elderly American klezorim, spoke about the difficulties of rounding up financing for projects and of the creative act of assembling a film, a process he described as "painful."

Rosenstein, whose movie was funded by the German and Swiss governments, expressed satisfaction that Jewish film festivals are clamoring for a A Tickle in the Heart. Yet he acknowledged that he and the director, Stefan Schwietert (who failed to appear at the symposium), would probably not recoup their expenses.

Rosenstein, though, was gratified by its warm reception at the Berlin Film Festival, where it had its debut. "We were really surprised by the huge standing ovation," he said.

Amos Gitai, director of The Arena of Murder, a brooding meditation of Israeli society since the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin, complained that international distributors usually marginalize films not made in English. And, sounding another glum note, he said that he was not "extremely optimistic" that his latest film would be bought by video distributors.

John Stuart Katz in 1976

Speaking through a translator, Judit Elek, the Hungarian director of To Speak the Unspeakable: The Message of Elie Wiesel, said that her biopic had been purchased by two television stations in Hungary. Her good fortune notwithstanding, she suggested that Jewish filmmakers should should form an association to distribute their films.

John Stuart Katz, the moderator and a professor of film at York University in Toronto, was receptive to her suggestion. But he pointed out that a similar idea had been raised-seven years ago at a film festival in Berlin and had yet to be acted upon.

Call it the power of inertia.

A play with a message

Last August, about five years after the infamous Crown Heights riots, a 43-year-old unemployed black man with a minor criminal record was charged by federal authorities with having been a catalyst in the cold-blooded murder of Yankel Rosenbaum.

Rosenbaum, an Australian yeshivah scholar, was set upon by a mob hours after Gavin Cato, a 7-year-old black boy, was fatally run over by a station wagon bearing Rabbi Menachem Schneerson, the spiritual leader of the Lubavitch movement. Since that dark day, tensions between Jews and blacks in Crown Heights have festered.

The unfortunate events in Crown Heights, a microcosm of the mutual suspicion which characterizes African American-Jewish relations today, are grist for playwright Anna Deavere Smith. Her play, Fires in the Mirror, which is being presented by the Canadian Stage Theatre in Toronto until Oct. 26, delves fearlessly but not always effectively into that morass.

The ethnic turmoil is acted out on a nearly bare stage by one lone actor, Marium Carvell, who plays 23 Jewish and African American characters. She acquits herself with verve and energy, but some of her portrayals fall short of the mark.

Fires in the Mirror generally succeeds in presenting both sides of the issues. Notwithstanding its shortcomings, this is thought-provoking theatre.

Palestinian film

The Tale of the Three Lost Jewels is billed as the first Palestinian feature film to be shot entirely on location in the Gaza Strip. Michel Khleifi's movie, which was recenly aired by Vision TV, is more allegorical than political. Still, it conveys a nationalistic statement through the mellow prism of adolescent infatuation.

The 51-minute film, set in the waning months of the intifadah, the Palestinian uprising, revolves around Yusef, a good natured 12-year-old Palestinian boy with a beatific smile who lives with his mother and older sister in a refugee camp adjacent to the Mediterranean Sea. Yusef's father is in an Israeli prison and his brother, a fugitive, is a member of a guerrilla band.

Yusef, a bird fancier, escapes to the pastoral countryside to get away from the brutality of life in Gaza. There, amid the sand dunes and a lowering winter sky, he meets a carefree, high-spirited girl named Aida. She enchants him with a seemingly aprocryphal story about lost jewels missing from her grandmother's necklace. Yusef is smitten by Aida, and promises to marry her one day.

The film, which unfolds against the backdrop of Palestinian strikes and a funeral march to protest Israel's occupation, also focuses on Yusef's friendship with Salah, the son of a prosperous citrus grower.

Salah, upon hearing of Yusef's dream to visit South America, packs his friend into an orange crate due to be trucked to the Israeli port of Ashdod for shipment overseas. A viewer wonders whether Yusef will survive the trip.

Competently crafted, The Tale of the Three Lost Jewels portrays Palestinian society as under siege by Israeli soldiers, and several violent scenes illustrate this Palestinian perception.

A band of Israeli undercover agents suddenly attacks a car filled with armed Palestinian men, killing one of the occupants. Boys throw stones at an Israeli jeep. A trigger-happy soldier in an Israeli patrol fires a shot at Yusef, only to be berated by one of his fellow soldiers.

Although The Tale of the Three Lost Jewels documents the pain of a people under occupation and their dreams of a better tomorrow, the film is neither radical nor rabid. Call it, if you will, a slice of Palestinian reality.

Rabbinic Reflections

Abraham's story

By RABBI KENNETH KATZ

A mature man, old in fact, who turns on his family; the death of a brother (Haran, Gen. 11:28); the travels across the world, a chase actually, after a goal that only grows farther away; misadventures with women and soldiers; money, a lot of it; a change of name. This is not the latest plot by Mordecai Richler. It is this week's Torah portion, Lech Lechah, the beginning of the story of Abram, later Abraham, the first Jew.

The Abraham story is not the story of a triumph. It is the story of a man who has both a vision of God and very real troubles; of a man who is sometimes wise and sometimes mistaken. Yet this man is our founder and father, the one chosen by God. Is this choice not a scandal?

Why did God choose this man? Certainly not for his perfection! The first 12 chapters of the Torah answer that very question. Why did God choose this Abram?

In the Garden of Eden, God provides the first humans with everything they require, with Paradise. Yet the humans cannot abide this and immediately disobey God's first command, not to eat of one particular tree. But the disobedience is less of a problem, I think, than the response of Adam and Eve.

After they eat the forbidden fruit, God asks, "Where are you? ... Did you eat of the tree from which I had forbidden you to eat?" (Gen. 4:11.) Listen to the answers.

The woman blames the serpent. "The serpent duped me and I ate." The man has even more chutzpah. He tells God, "It was the woman you put at my side — she gave me of the tree and I ate" (Gen. 3:12). Adam blames God Himself.

And Cain and Abel? After Cain murders Abel, when God asks Cain where Abel is, comes Cain's famous answer, "Am I my brother's keeper?" (4:9).

And in the time of Noah, though Noah obeys God's command to build an ark, Noah makes no effort whatsoever to protect any of his friends and neighbors either by warning them or by arguing with God. And even after getting out of the ark and receiving, in a scene worthy of grand opera, God's promise never again to destroy the world, marked forever into the very sky itself by the sign of the rainbow, what does Noah do? He invents wine, gets drunk and gets into a sexual scrape with one of his sons (Gen. 9:20-27).

See the story up to now from the viewpoint of Heaven. God gives the humans paradise, but they cannot abide this. He leaves them free to do as they see fit and one murders the other. He destroys the world, but discovers that punishment, even on a vast scale, fails to change human behavior. What is lacking is a person who is prepared not just to obey, but to reflect; not just to act, but to accept responsibility for his or her actions. What is lacking is a person who is as ready to meet God as God is to meet him. Now we are ready for Abram.

Abram is 75 years old when we first meet him. He has lived a lifetime in Mesopotamia, seat of an urban civilization that is already ancient in Abram's time. The cities of Abram's time may have lacked steam power, oil and electricity, but otherwise they had most everything a modern city has — stores and restaurants, gutters and glitter, armies, taxes, families, scandals, schools, stories, religions.

The Torah does not tell us much about Abram's first 75 years, except that whatever he had in this brilliant Los Angeles of yesterday lacked — something. As a result, when God calls him — whatever the meaning of the mysterious words, "The Lord said to Abram, "Go forth ... to the land that I will show you" (Gen. 12:1) — he goes. Just like that.

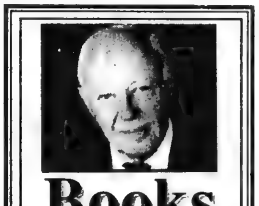
It is, you see, a fateful meeting — of a man who is clearly dissatisfied with a world that everyone around him finds full, bustling and important, but in which he sees the lack of something — and of God who has abandoned Paradise and abandoned punishment to work out a new plan. The new plan is to address Himself to one family and then one nation, to give them Torah (the word Torah means instruction) by which these humans can work out for themselves the perfection of the world.

Abram is not perfect. God does not choose him for his perfection. He chooses Abram because he is a man who has discovered, by a lifetime of thoughtful living, that something important is wrong with this world of his.

He is a man ready for a vision, a man ready for an encounter with God. And so when God speaks, at first perhaps vaguely and mysteriously, but then loudly and clearly, about justice, righteousness and blessing (Gen. 18:19), with instruction as to how to live with Torah, Abram hears.

Fellow Jews! Every one of us is a potential Abram. The terrifying words of covenant/invitation/command ring down the ages to our ears also. When will we stop being the resentful Adam, the cowardly Eve, the morally deaf Cain, the self-centered Noah? God's words still call every Abram.

Rabbi Katz is the spiritual leader of Congregation Beth El, Town of Mt. Royal, Quebec.



Books

By Bernard Baskin

Wisdom of the ages

A History Of Reading by Alberto Manguel, Random House $35

Benjamin Disraeli once wrote, "Books are fatal: they are the curse of the human race. Nine-tenths of existing books are nonsense, and the clever books are the refutation of that nonsense. The greatest misfortune that ever befell man was the invention of printing." This melancholy opinion, however, didn't prevent him from writing a dozen or more books.

His father, Isaac, a well-known litterateur, was of a different mind. He concluded that the delights of reading "impart the vivacity and the novelty of youth — even in old age."

In any case, of all the human pleasures that are free of guilt, none is more widespread than reading. Properly considered it is a form of alchemy. It transmutes printed symbols into imagery and meaning. A small number of letters in an infinite variety of combinations, establishes communication and conveys the wisdom of the ages.

Alberto Manguel, an esteemed Canadian author, anthologist, writer and editor has written an agreeable, informed, anecdotal, personal treatise about reading in its many forms and variations. The method is thematic rather than chronological.

Twenty well-researched chapters deal with learning to read, book collectors and book thieves, great libraries, the invention and importance of eyeglasses, censorship old and new, the transformation of scrolls into paged codexes, how oral eventually became silent reading and so forth.

In the chapter on censorship, we learn that in May 1932, before a cheering crowd of 100,000, the Nazis burned more than 20,000 books; that the odious Anthony Comstock in the late 19th century founded New York's Society for the Suppression of Vice, and boasted that over a 40-year period, "I have convicted persons enough to fill a passenger train of 61 coaches, 60 coaches containing 60 passengers each, and destroyed 160 tons of obscene literature;" and that the Catholic Church didn't abandon its age-old indexing of prohibited books until 1966.

Jewish Life

Rabin on the Web

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

The 12th of Cheshvan marks the first yahrzeit of Yitzhak Rabin, whose assassination shocked the world and caused an immediate outpouring of grief.

This terrible event also marked the first time that Jews turned to the Internet as a place where they could unite to spontaneously mourn, question and console each other. As a result, there are probably more sites devoted to the life and death of Yitzhak Rabin than to any other single event in Jewish or Israeli life.

Today I would like to look at some of those sites.

There are many good biographies of Rabin on the Internet including Yitzhak Rabin – The Story of a True Sabra [http://www.magnet.co.il/rabin/legacy.html] and the one written by Israel's Ministry of Foreign Affairs. [http://www.israelmfa.gov.il./gov/rabin.html]. Time Magazine has published an excellent pictorial biography of Rabin at [http://pathfinder.com/time/special/rabin/index.html]. Click on the Photo Credits button in order to see descriptions of the photographs.

One of the late prime minister's proudest moments was being awarded the 1994 Nobel Peace Prize [http://www.almaz.com/nobel/peace/1994c.html] along with co-recipients Shimon Peres and Yasser Arafat. For the text of Rabin's acceptance speech in Oslo, see [http://www.israel-mfa.gov.il/peace/rabinnob.html].

There are several sites that have links to Web pages devoted to Yitzhak Rabin. The Politics Page [http://ucsu.colorado.edu/~jsu/politics.html#genpol] of the Ultimate Jewish/Israel Link Launcher has links to over 100 other sites.

Also try Yahoo at [http://yahoo.com/headlines/ special/rabin/], David Lisbona's links at [http://actcom.co.il/~dlisbona/], and Nandonet's The assassination of Yitzhak Rabin [http://-www2.nando.net/newsroom/nt/morerabin.html] and [http://www2.nando.net/newsroom/nt/moerabin1.html].

There is also the very interesting Collection of Rabbinic Statements [http://shamash.org/mail-jewish/rabin.html] with essays from rabbis who may not have agreed with Rabin's politics but were repulsed by Yigal Amir and his actions. In his essay Was Rabin's Assassin an Observant Jew? [http://shamash.org/mail-jewish/Rabin/Boteach_1.txt] Rabbi ShmuelBoteach says, "while Yigal Amir may once have been an observant Jew, pulling the trigger of his handgun changed all that."

And then there are the very personal Web pages that sprung up-spontaneously so individuals could share their grief. For a sample, see Ariga's In Mourning In Memorium [http://ariga.co.il/peacebiz/rabin/condol1.htm] and the Jewish Communication Network's Condolences from our Readers [http://www.jcn18.com/mourn.htm] and All We Were Saying was Give Peace a Chance [http://teletel.co.il/asi/rabin], a very large page with notes, pictures and even poetry from around the world.

"My flight is suddenly broken/ I have no olive branch./ Abruptly it has been snatched from my beak/ I struggle to find my feet/ I dream of the time my olive branch will be returned to my beak, and when I will fly again over Jerusalem my wings sheltering the people below who will be safe from tragedy in our Homeland." Jane Zurnamer, 14, Masada College, Sydney, Australia.

Another important place to discuss last year's events is in the Usenet Newsgroups. Although the content of Newsgroups changes on a daily basis, this is one of the best places to go to exchange thoughts and feelings. The major areas where you might find people discussing Yitzhak Rabin and his legacy are [soc.culture.israel], [talk.politics.mideast] and [soc.culture.jewish].

The late prime minister's own words can also be found on the Internet with the text of his final speech given to the peace rally in Tel Aviv [http://www.-jewishpost.com/jewishpost/rabin10.html]. On that Saturday evening, Rabin also joined in singing A Song for Peace - Shir La Shalom. The song was already popular before the assassination and has only gained in fame since. You can find its lyrics in English, transliterated Hebrew, and if you have Hebrew fonts installed, in Hebrew, at [http://www.macom.co.il/hebrew/shirshlm.html]. And you can hear a recording of the song from that rally (with Rabin singing toward the end) at [http://www.artificia.com/sounds/shir.raj.

Israel's Artificia site [http://www.artificia.com/html/rabin.htm] makes creative use of audio and even video. On that page you will find links to the Kol Yisrael broadcasts from that tragic week in Hebrew and English. There is also a short radio montage in Hebrew with some English. (You will need RealAudio or InternetWave to hear these files.

Artificia also includes a 90-second video excerpt of President Bill Clinton's eulogy [http://www.vdolive.com/vdofiles/clintn20.vdo]. In order to properly view this video clip you will need a powerful computer such as a Pentium or a Macintosh Power PC with a fast Internet connection. And you'll need to download the free VDO Live Video Player from [http://www.vdo.net/download/].

If your computer can't handle that video file, you can read President Clinton's moving comments at [http://www.jewishpost.com/jewishpost/rabin03.html]. For other eulogies, go to the Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs [http://www.israel-mfa.gov.il/news/yrabin.html]. There you will find links to eulogies by King Hussein, Ezer Weizman, Shimon Peres, Hosni Mubarak and others.

But surely the most heart-breaking eulogy didn't come from a world leader but from Yitzhak Rabin's granddaughter Noa Ben-Artzi Filosof [http://www.israel.org/news/noa.html].

"People greater than I have already eulogized you, but none of them was fortunate like myself to feel the caress of your warm, soft hands and the warm embrace that was just for us, or your half-smiles which will always say so much, the same smile that is no more, and froze with you. I have no feelings of revenge because my pain and loss are so big, too big...To the angels of heaven that are accompanying you now, I ask that they watch over you, that they guard you well, because you deserve such a guard. We will love you grandfather, always."

Several years ago there was an amusing cartoon in the New Yorker magazine. One woman asks a companion if she has read a certain book. And the other responds, "Not personally." Reading is something that we must experience individually. It is not surprising that the author relates much about himself and his relation to the many-sided realm of the book.

In discussing the Jewish approach to reading, Manguel tells the story of Rabbi Levi Yitzhak of Berdichev, one of the great 18th century chassidic masters, who was asked why the first page of the treatises in the Babylonian Talmud is always missing, so that readers are forced to begin on page 2. "Because," answered the rabbi, "no matter how many pages the scholar reads, he must never forget that he has not yet reached the very first page."

Book lovers and others will delight in this many-levelled — well illustrated — depiction of an activity that — almost as much as breathing — is our essential function.

Leaders from Chabad Lubavitch of Markham take part in shul groundbreaking.

Lubavitch shul gets underway

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The "miracle in Markham," as speaker after speaker described it, took a giant step closer to fruition with the recent official groundbreaking for the new Chabad Lubavitch of Markham synagogue.

The new facility, on Green Lane in the Bayview-John area, will include a sanctuary, classrooms, a library, a kitchen, offices and a mikvah. It is expected to open in early 1997.

The congregation davened first in the rabbi's basement and for the past several years in an industrial building on Guardsman Road.

Exuberant congregation members grabbed the golden shovel and joined in the festivities. Even some of the children took a turn.

Eric Inspector, building committee chair, praised the congregation for working so hard to reach "the official groundbreaking of our very own shul. You did it, and here we are."

An emotional David Wiener, synagogue president, lauded the committees and members for contributing "the time and money to build a home we can call ours."

He also praised spiritual leader and executive director Rabbi Avraham Plotkin and his wife Goldie, for "leaving their home town to give of themselves to our community."

Greetings were brought by Rabbi Moshe Stern, on behalf of the Vaad Harabonim of Greater Toronto; Rabbi David Schochet, spiritual leader of the Lubavitch community of Toronto; Regional Counsellor Bill Fisch, on behalf of Markham mayor Don Cousens; Marjorie Nielsen, on behalf of the government of Ontario; David Tsubouchi, minister of consumer and corporate relations, and MPP for Markham; and Moshe Ronen, chair of Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region.

Rabbi Plotkin said the aim of the synagogue had been to "create a space where people can grow as Jews. We didn't thrust observance down anyone's throat — we created a loving, caring environement for families to grow in Yiddishkeit."

He compared the groundbreaking to a bris, which marks the beginning of a person's journey through life.

"How many people can say that they saw the walls go up in their shul? Every brick belongs to every one of us."

The shul, he said, will be like Noah's ark, "protecting us from the spiritual storms outside." It will be "filled with Torah, with classes, with programs for children, adults, old people."

He noted that as the eastern wall of the foundation was being poured, a piece of stone from the Western Wall and from the shul in Massada, and some sand from the Dead Sea were added to it.

Many Toronto-area rabbis were present, including Yitzchok Kerzner, Baruch Taub, Reuven Tradburks, Raphael Marcus, Yaacov Felder and Irwin Witty, as well as rabbis from the Lubavitch community.

Kosher food concession a success at Wonderland

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

The Kosher Land Fast Food cart at Wonderland.

TORONTO — The first-ever kosher food concession at Canada's Wonderland recently closed its premiere season.

It was, according to its owners, an overwhelming success. "The reaction of the Jewish community has been phenomenal," said Isaac Kraus, who operates the concession with his wife Anat.

The KosherLand Fast Food cart sold hotdogs, vegetarian products and slush drinks, "the only kosher slush machine in Ontario," Isaac boasted.

"It has exceeded all of our expectations. Jews, non-Jews including Muslims, and day school teachers with their students came to the kosher food cart."

Isaac and Anat came here 10 years ago from Israel, where they lived on a non-religious kibbutz.

After arriving in Toronto, Isaac worked as a limousine driver, but several years ago, had a serious car accident. While recovering, he began attending a Chabad Lubavitch synagogue, and says he's now deeply involved with Judaic studies and attends the Israeli minyan at the synagogue.

Isaac said a kosher food concession at Wonderland was Anat's idea, after she realized that a person who keeps kosher could not bring food into the park.

"And it wasn't easy to convince the management," she added.

"After much persuasion," Isaac said, "we were granted permission to sell kosher fast food on their property."

With supervision of the COR Rabbinical Vaad Hakashruth, Isaac located a cart and hired the yeshivah students who worked the concession.

"It took almost three months of negotiating, planning and preparation and the kosher cart began operating on July 17. It was an immediate success. And now we are negotiating for a permanent booth at Wonderland for next year and we hope to make more products available," Isaac said.

Management at Wonderland has received letters from members of the Jewish community thanking them for having "the sensitivity and wisdom to open a kosher food concession in your park this season," Isaac said.

A rabbi/educator wrote that the new kosher concession "was a treat for both children and (sometimes quite desperate) parents. For many families it lengthened previous half-day trips to full-day trips."

The Krauses have received approval to open a concession at Ontario Place next season and they are exploring future locations in airports, Niagara Falls and in other entertainment parks.

Hooping it up. Some of the fun on Jewish Community Day at Canada's Wonderland. (Stephen Epstein photo)

WonderFun Day draws crowd

TORONTO — At least 1,500 Jewish community members turned WonderFun Day at Paramount Canada's Wonderland into a "wonder-full" day.

Attendance for the park's first ever Jewish Community WonderFun day on Oct. 13 was boosted by sunny, warm weather and discounted ticket prices.

The day featured music by The Stars Band, with Liberty Silver, Peter May, Shlomo Aviv and the Mandell Entertainment Group Dancers, Times Square Entertainment, headed by Rick Levine and Phil Kravetsky, from The Radio Show.

Wonderland, which planned the day in cooperation with UJA Federation, has previously sponsored special days for other ethnocultural groups.

Plans are already underway to hold next year's Jewish community day earlier in the year and offer even more entertainment.

Social services financing difficult

By CINDY WAXER
Special to the CJN

TORONTO – It has always been difficult in financial terms to successfully serve clients with special needs, says Ontario's minister of community and social services, and current cutbacks to the province's social service network have made it even harder.

"No matter how rich a society we have been in the past years, there has never been enough money for the social service field," Janet Ecker told some 150 people at Adath Israel Synagogue for the annual meeting of Jewish Vocational Services of Metropolitan Toronto (JVS).

Since 1995, jobsOntario and the Access to Apprenticeship Training project, two provincially funded programs, have been dismantled. And two of JVS' current programs will soon cease following the introduction of new legislation impacting employment training services.

Rather than dwell on impending cutbacks to social assistance, however, Ecker praised JVS for its "distinguished record of helping people overcome adversity and achieve their aspirations."

Ecker defined her ministry's vision of social services as "an affordable and effective system that supports and invests in families and communities to make them responsible and accountable."

This vision, she said, involves gauging the impact of programs, focusing on direct delivery, ensuring the flexibility and accessibility of programs and recognizing and responding to the needs of individual clients.

Ecker assured her audience that "community groups and government can work together to bring about community projects."

Yet despite her hopes for a symbiotic relationship, she also emphasized the need to empower individuals by "trying to get [them] off social assistance and back into the workforce."

This will be accomplished, she said, through programs currently being implemented by the provincial government, such as the controversial workfare project.

"We have a shared obligation to the people who rely on these services, just as we have a shared obligation to the taxpayers who fund them," she said.

Founded in 1947, JVS was created to help survivors of the Holocaust adjust to their new country. Today, the agency serves a broad spectrum of people including new immigrants, people with developmental disabilities, children in Jewish day schools and people recovering from brain injury. In the past year, JVS has helped more than 8,000 people.

Teddy Abromovici, a Romanian immigrant, praised JVS, describing how the employment counselling program taught him to develop a plan of action to become self-sufficient and to adapt to a changing work environment. Presently employed in the field of computer programming, he described JVS as "the friend that was there when you needed it."

Hospital restructuring

an was discharged from hospital prematurely, and although her neighbors rallied to help, died four days later.

Meade noted that although the District Health Council has approved the establishment of 390 transitional beds in Metro, the restructuring committee has not implemented the recommendation.

Severe cutbacks and a "having to do more with less" attitude have brought dramatic changes, said Dr. Chris Patterson, head of geriatrics at McMaster Health Science Centre. He described the situation as "chaotic."

With cuts in long-term care, Patterson said, officials are "warehousing" people who "are being parked, when facilities could be used more wisely."

There are no additional resources and the government is making the health sector a market place, said Amy Go, director of community support services at Woodgreen Community Centre.

"Community groups are getting people together to talk about what we can do to pool our resources."

Conference participants stressed the need for post-discharge planning and the need to communicate with the patient and the family early.

Professionals must become more sensitive to the family's needs and work as a team, "something we are not taught in medical school," said panelist Dr. Barry Goldlist of the Metropolitan Toronto Regional Geriatric Program. "Knowledge and skills are not enough — attitude is important."

Those needing services and their caregivers need to be educated, the conference heard. Knowing the process and providing correct information was cited as a priority.

Conference organizers included the Task Force on Transitional Care, the Home Care Program for Metropolitan Toronto, the Toronto Hospital, the Woodgreen Community Centre, Senior People's Resources in North Toronto (SPRINT), the Older Women's Network, and the Ontario Coalition of Senior Citizens' Organizations. The conference was funded through a grant from the Trillium Foundation.

NCSY gets new programs, larger office in Thornhill

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The National Conference of Synagogue Youth (NCSY) is moving up in the world — north to Thornhill, to be specific.

Toronto's woefully cramped NCSY office, located in a storefront on Bathurst Street south of Wilson Avenue, is scheduled to move to a shopping plaza at the northwest corner of Bathurst and Steeles Avenue on Nov. 1. The move will almost triple its space, from 1,600 to 4,200 square feet.

"I believe it might be the largest drop-in centre on the continent," said Rabbi Glenn Black, NCSY's 27-year-old regional director. The recently ordained rabbi heads the organization's full-time staff of five people.

Expanding outreach

Although it is run under the auspices of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, NCSY is independent of individual congregations and is open to youth from a variety of Jewish backgrounds.

The group has a mailing list of about 1,500, a high percentage of whom are not Orthodox, Rabbi Black said. "Our mandate is that you can believe in anything you want, as long as you get some Jewish education."

He himself teaches in 10 different locations a week, and the organization is expanding its outreach component.

Among its programs "Our Way," geared to deaf Jewish youth; Yachad, for the developmentally disabled, and Shabbatonim (about 200 last year alone) for junior and senior high school students. It also runs Free Torah High School for Jewish teens attending public high schools. Courses include Hebrew history, Jewish philosophy and Chumash.

Three years ago NCSY launched the Hebrew Culture Club at William Lyon Mackenzie Collegiate Institute, an informal group to discuss Jewish issues under the guidance of an NCSY facilitator. There are now seven such programs in the Toronto area.

The Toronto office is currently launching a new parent/teen program with the help of a $15,000 grant from the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto. The program will use videotapes of popular television shows originally chosen for NCSY's 10-year-old LAVE (Life & Values Education) program, which uses the tapes as a springboard to discussion on Jewish values.

"We hope to bring parents and kids into Jewish dialogue," said Rabbi Black. "They don't [always] talk about the more important things closer to home." Typical issues covered in such programs include cheating, medical ethics, how to give tzedakah, the environment and Judaism, and caring for the elderly.

Another new project is a bar/bat mitzvah program in Richmond Hill, but what probably energizes Rabbi Black the most is his one-on-one dealings with the students.

At the current location, the rabbi finds he can barely work after school lets out and the teens start dropping in. "It's crazy, but hopefully it will be even more crazy in the new location."

A quiet moment for Rabbi Glenn Black, above, doesn't last long: the hallway in NCSY's old office is also used as a classroom. [Frances Kraft photo]

I BELIEVE

I BELIEVE that our commitment to quality education will ensure the future of our Jewish community.

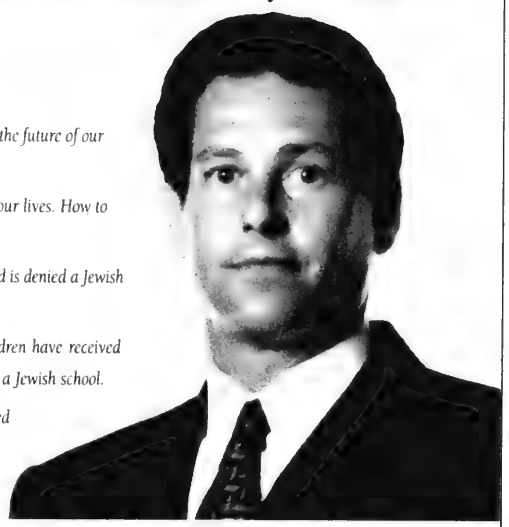
Jews have always pursued answers to fundamental questions: How to live our lives. How to conduct our business. How to raise our children.

The pursuit of knowledge is one of our highest priorities. That's why no child is denied a Jewish education because of an inability to pay.

The result is a community rich in Jewish learning. Almost all of our children have received some form of Jewish education and nearly 60 per cent are now enrolled in a Jewish school.

I believe UJA Federation, by supporting an internationally admired education network, is the most efficient means of ensuring that what we value — as a Jewish community — is translated into effective action. Now. And always.



Dale Lastman

Through its funding for the Board of Jewish Education, UJA Federation supports dozens of schools across the religious spectrum, life-long learning programs for adults, and special programs for those with special needs.

Still, it is not enough. The resources we need can only come from one place: Our community. Each and every one of us.

FOR OUR COMMUNITY. FOR ISRAEL.
FOR OUR CHILDREN. FOREVER.

Women said a key part of Holocaust study

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Although half of Holocaust victims were women, they are not documented as they should be claims a pioneer of Holocaust studies and a founder of the first Center of Holocaust Studies in the United States.

"Women must be included in any study of the Holocaust if it is to be done with dignity and accuracy," says Yaffa Eliach, a professor of Judaic studies at Brooklyn College and a contributing scholar to the Women's Studies Encyclopedia and the Encyclopedia Judaica.

She is also the creator of the Tower of Life, a collection of 3,500 pictures about the life and history of a small town in Europe before the Holocaust, now housed at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington.

In a telephone interview, Eliach, 59, whose own mother and infant brother were killed by a band of Poles in 1944, said that when picking the pictures, it was important to her to depict life rather than death. "I did not want the people shown only as victims. I wanted them depicted as humans before victimization."

Although so much has been reported and commemorated about the Holocaust, too little speaks to the gender-specific experiences of women, says Eliach. "Learning about the Holocaust is like doing a puzzle. Every aspect must be studied in order to understand it well. I am not concerned only about women, but I am concerned about a precise documentary."

During the Holocaust, and especially in the concentration camps, men and women were segregated, and since the majority of writers and historians are men "it is only natural that they write from a man's experience. We must ensure that memoirs written by women are equally represented," she says.

Women's issues during the Holocaust differed greatly from men's and it is important to emphasize their unique position, says Eliach.

"Upon selection at the camps, women were sent to the gas chambers and men were sent to do labor. Women who were pregnant or had children stood no chance of survival. They could not hide, because they had crying children and they always had to make the choice whether or not to abandon their children. The choice for mothers was between life and death and that is often more tragic than for men. Every Jewish mother had to make Sophie's choice. Single women, on the other hand, especially those who spoke the language fluently, could hide out more easily because for men, circumcision was a big give-away.

Yaffa Eliach

"In other words, sometimes women had less chance for survival than men and other times they had more chance. It is important to understand the differences because the better we understand and analyse the more chance we have of prevention. Sometimes, we are too general in our analysis which means we are not learning the proper lesson. We are not learning about pain and tears when we study the Holocaust, we are learning how to prevent future tragedies."

Female partisans, who were great fighters, also had different experiences than men, says Eliach. "Women partisans always needed a male protector. No matter how brave they were, they needed a male friend to be with them. Despite their heroic achievements, then, they were not treated equally. People do not like to point this out because it demeans men. It shows that they did not look upon women as equals."

Eliach will give three lectures on women in the Holocaust on Nov. 16, 8 p.m. and Nov. 17, 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., at Temple Emanu-El, as part of Holocaust Education Week sponsored by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

New Betar-Tagar shaliach stays away from politics

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — As the shaliach for a right-wing group, Pinchas (Pini) Ravid walks a fine line to keep "ideology" separate from politics.

The Toronto-based envoy for Betar-Tagar replaced shlichah Sharon Tsur last month following her relocation to New York as North American Betar shlichah earlier this year.

"I'm representing an ideological movement and I'm staying away from politics," said Ravid, a 28-year-old Kfar Saba native, in the office he shares with Herut-Likud in Toronto's Zionist building.

Betar, which was founded in Latvia in 1923 and is now established in 15 countries, is the youth wing of Herut-Likud. Tagar was begun in the mid-1980s as its branch for university students, but only got off the ground here in 1994, when Tsur arrived as Toronto's first Betar-Tagar shlichah. There are now branches of Tagar at York University and the University of Toronto, as well as on a number of other campuses. Ravid is the only Betar shaliach in Canada.

The group for younger teens serves those 13 and up. They can participate in an upcoming weekend retreat to be held in Cleveland in November. Ravid expects that students from Toronto, Montreal, New York and Florida will attend.

Betar-Tagar's mandate here includes working for "Jewish values and Israeli values," said Ravid. With both an educational and an activist bent, it has included among its major projects an ongoing campaign to free missing Israeli navigator Ron Arad.

Most recently, the campaign took the form of a protest in front of the Iranian embassy in Ottawa last week.

Betar also fights anti-Semitism and supports Jewish settlers living outside of Israel's Green Line. Ravid stresses, however, that it is not a fundraising organization.

There are no specific campaigns to support settlers, but "if they need help and if security will allow it, we can visit them," said Ravid, who is looking into arranging a Betar trip to Israel. "Our goals are to strengthen the connection with Israel for youth."

While his ideology includes the "utopian" ideal of every Jew living in Israel, Ravid says that Betar is not a "missionary" group. "We're not trying to steal kids and take them to Israel."

Reluctantly weighing reality against his ideal, Ravid acknowledges the importance of Diaspora Jewry. "It's very important that they're here."

TORONTO — Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue has embarked on a year-long journey that will culminate in the completion of a Torah commissioned to honor Rabbi Joseph Kelman, who will retire next fall after 38 years of service.

A recent Sunday "Torah Fest" kicked off a year of Torah-related events. "Our objective is to have educational programs so people feel closer to the Torah and [come to] understand the importance of Torah in our everyday lives," said Pearl Grundland, co-chair of the education component of the Siyum Hatorah year.

In conjunction with the writing of the Torah, for which members can sponsor different portions, the shul plans to institute the Rabbi Joseph Kelman Endowment Fund for Jewish Continuity to fund programs for young people, such as scholarships to study in Israel.

A longtime proponent of taking responsibility in the greater community, Rabbi Kelman was a co-founder of the Reena Foundation and Shearim Hebrew Day School, both of which were represented at the Torah Fest.

Following a brief ceremony, which included Songs of the Torah sung by the synagogue choir and Zemer Chorale, Torah Fest participants were invited to see Torah art by Dubi Arie and a display of ceremonial objects.

Rabbi Yechezkel Shapiro, the sofer (scribe) affiliated with the project, was on hand to field questions about the ancient and exacting art of writing Torah scrolls and parchments for mezuzot and tefillin.

Writing scrolls and beautifying them with decorative coverings is a way of "honoring G-d by uplifting ourselves," said Rabbi Barry Schneider, Beth Emeth's associate rabbi, in a d'var Torah.

In the past decade, there's been a new, hi-tech twist added to the sofer's art, at least when it comes to proofreading, explained Rabbi Shapiro. Torah scrolls are now routinely read by a computer to check for errors, he said.

Beth Emeth's new Torah scroll, the first to be specially commissioned for the shul, will probably be written in Israel.

The project will give synagogue members "the opportunity to personally observe the 613th mitzvah, which commands every Jew to write a Torah in his or her lifetime," said Sigmund Reiser, co-chair with Ralph Snow of the shul's Siyum Hatorah steering committee.

Synagogue members will complete the Torah either symbolically or by actually finishing partially printed letters with the help of Rabbi Shapiro, who will be responsible for ensuring the Torah's halachic acceptability.

Storytelling Festival

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The famous Mona Lisa eating a slice of rye bread?

Yes, it's true, and organizers of the Jewish Storytelling Festival on Oct. 27, at the North York Central Library, are using the slogan "a taste of wry" to publicize it and going one better.

"Because Jewish people like food as well as stories, we're providing squares of rye bread and various dips, including smoked salmon and hummus, for everyone attending," said Alec Gelcer.

In addition, the festival is offering a story "swap" session between 5:30 and 7:30 p.m., when people can make their own sandwiches (on rye of course and on food supplied) and swap stories with each other.

And the festival, both stories and food, is free, to all ages.

It begins with a children's concert (ages four to eight) from 10:30 a.m. to noon, featuring entertainers Kim and Jerry Brodie, singing

In the afternoon (1 to 5 p.m.), 20 storytellers will take the stage. They include virtuoso artists, too numerous to mention, but known as headliners in the community. This year all the stories will be in English but they'll all have Jewish characters in them, whether rabbis, cantors or tailors.

Because the stories are universal in appeal, both in the telling and the listening, several of the storytellers, including Helen Porter, the doyen of the craft, are non-Jewish.

"We hope that non-Jews who like well-told stories will come," said program head Gelcer. "You don't have to be Jewish to enjoy a taste of wry," he said.

The evening storytelling cabaret (7:30 to 9:30 p.m.) will have many performers who play instruments or sing along with their stories.

The festival will be held on the second floor of the library building, 5120 Yonge St., in the auditorium and adjacent areas. Signs will be posted to show the way.

Book planned on issues relating to continuity

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Organizers of last weekend's conference on Creating the Jewish Future, held at York University, are working on a spinoff project to reach a wider audience.

A committee of four York academics — Irving Abella, Michael Brown, Syd Eisen and Bernie Lightman — will compile conference analyses and programming suggestions into book form. It is hoped the volume will be published within a year, said Brown.

Two or three American commercial publishers are bidding on the manuscript, which will be distributed internationally, said Abella.

"I think it will be a fairly unique volume which will bring together town and gown," he added.

The mix of scholarly presentations and community planning — "probably a mix that no one else has tried to do," said Brown, was the most unique aspect of the conference.

The event, which brought together academics from Israel, the United States and Canada, and was attended by some 300 people, was the first of such magnitude to be organized by the university's Centre for Jewish Studies.

Among the speakers were Norma Joseph of Montreal, Israeli author Hillel Halkin, Toronto Rabbi Gunther Plaut and Morton Weinfeld of McGill University.

Session topics included The Centrality of Israel in the Jewish World, Faith and Religion in a "Secular" Age, The Future of Jewish Cultures in the Diaspora, Educating for the Future, Changing Gender Expectations and Roles in Jewish Communal Life, and Demography and Economics: The Institutional Response.

The conference was sponsored by business executive Bernie Ghert, philanthropist and past president of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto. It was at Ghert's suggestion over a year ago that the conference was organized.

Although continuity has become a buzzword in the Jewish community in recent years, the Canadian Jewish community is fortunate, Abella believes.

"We are probably less in a state of crisis than other communities," he said. "The Canadian Jewish community is the fastest growing in the Diaspora. We're fully integrated. Our day schools are thriving. New synagogues are being built, [but] at the same time our worries are about our kids. Will they remain Jewish? ... Can we afford the education costs and commitment that are required?"

Holocaust Education Week shifts direction

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — This year's Holocaust Education Week features several subtle changes, indicating a shift in direction for the program.

The changes point to a new emphasis in finding programs of interest to Jewish youth and extending the event's reach into the broader community, says Doron Opher, co-chair along with Michael Herman of the Holocaust Education Committee.

The shift did not come without some spirited internal discussion, but in the end, it was decided that it was time to break away from previous formats that were "positioned" to appeal to older Jews and the Jewish community, he said.

Older people naturally gravitate to the Holocaust programming, but "we wanted to make it more accessible" to the younger generation as well as to non-Jews, Opher said.

This year, a variety of churches across the city will host programs on the Holocaust while Jewish community venues will address an eclectic variety of themes, among them programs of interest to younger people.

The Bloor Jewish Community Centre will host an evening of music, readings and a screening of the films, Night and Fog and We are Children Just the Same: 'Vedem', the Secret Magazine, about the boys of Terezin.

The Canadian Friends of Givat Haviva will present Israeli educator Ariel Horowitz who will discuss the role of the youth movement in ghetto uprisings.

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the Nuremburg war crimes trials and with that in mind, Holocaust Education Week features several programs to mark the anniversary, Opher said.

On Nov. 11, the Jewish Civil Rights Educational Foundation will sponsor former Nuremberg prosecutor Whitney Harris, who will discuss the evidence presented at Nuremberg.

Siegfried Halbreich, a Holocaust survivor, will discuss his wartime experiences as well as his participation in preparing prosecutors for Nuremberg.

Author Erna Paris will discuss "history, memory and the burden of guilt," a lecture based in part on the controversial book, Hitler's Willing Executioners by Daniel Goldhagen.

Other highlights of the 10-day-long event, which begins Nov. 7, include: discussions on women in the Holocaust by Prof. Susan Nowak and by Prof. Yaffa Eliach; a lecture by Prof. Michael Marrus on the Vatican and the Holocaust; a discussion by Prof. Michael Bar-Zohar on the rescue of Bulgarian Jewry.

The opening night of Holocaust Education Week features Gerda and Kurt Klein. Gerda Klein's story was told in One Survivor Remembers, a film that won the 1996 Oscar for best documentary. Klein's autobiography, All But My Life, depicts her view of the Holocaust and describes her liberation by U.S. armed forces that included her husband, Lt. Kurt Klein.

Holocaust Education Week is coordinated by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of UJA Federation.

Historian captures war ordeal faced by 'the boys'

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Today, "the boys" are in their mid-to-late 60s, graying, many with widened middles. But they exude vitality, optimism and prosperity. They challenge each others' memories, swap childhood stories with great verve and casually tell of unspeakable evil — starvation, beatings, even cannibalism — the way others talk about the weather.

Their bonhomie belies a harrowing tale of survival at an age when most kids have dating and school on their minds. Fifty years ago, having lived through the hell of several Nazi death camps, the teenagers were shunted off to Britain, where they attempted to piece their lives back together before coming to Canada.

Now, their tale has been told by the prolific British historian Martin Gilbert, Winston Churchill's official biographer and among the most respected living chroniclers of the Holocaust.

Gilbert's just-released The Boys (Douglas & McIntyre, $37.50) tells the remarkable story of 732 young concentration camp survivors — the boys, they were called, although several girls were among them — most of them orphaned, all of them battered and stunned — who were taken in by a sympathetic British government after the war.

Among them were 40 who eventually came to Canada, mainly Toronto. Today, like Izzie Light, Joshua Segal and Howard Chandler, the surviving 24 or so in this country are busy with grandparenting, business and even their own memoir writing. Among "the boys" is Edith Kaufman, who lives in Dundas, Ont.

For some, like Light, now 66, the Holocaust is too painful to recall. A Lodz-born survivor of Auschwitz and Buchenwald (where a young Elie Wiesel was a barrackmate), Light was just 15 when he was part of the first transport of 300 or so youngsters flown from Prague to Carlisle, in northern England, in August 1945. A second group of about 400 arrived in Southampton from Munich later.

Light and his brethren were rescued by a measure of mercy absent in other Western capitals, including Ottawa. At war's end, following a campaign by British Jewish philanthropist Leonard Montefiore, London decided to grant asylum to 1,000 Jewish survivors of Hitler under age 16. But a macabre problem arose: officials could not find 1,000 youngsters; the Nazis had murdered 1.5 million Jewish children and youths. Thus, just 732 were given the opportunity to start new lives in Britain, where they encountered warmth and caring — not to mention real food and shelter — for the first time in years.

"We reverted more or less to a normal existence," Chandler, 68, is quoted as saying in the book. "We had to acquire new skills in order to cope with daily living."

Small wonder. Chandler had seen it all by the time he was 17, having experienced the Jewish ghetto and a slave labor camp in his native Wierzbnik, near Warsaw, and later, 10 months at Birkenau. His mother, sister and brother perished at Treblinka.

In England, while living with two aunts, he apprenticed in a diamond factory. Chandler arrived in Canada in December 1947, immediately finding work as a diamond cutter and in the process, a new life.

Segal too arrived in Carlisle in August 1945, after having survived Buchenwald and a vicious beating with a chair from the commandant of Nordhausen. In England, he learned the mechanic's trade — well enough to qualify for a coveted Rolls-Royce licence — and came to Canada in 1947, along with 700 war brides, following the personal intervention of the late Senator David Croll.

Segal, 69, could not talk about his experiences for nearly 50 years, until the recent death of his brother. Now, he's penning his memoirs.

So is Light. He learned welding at an ORT school in South Kensington, and entered Canada in 1948 as a welder. Appropriately, the working title of his story is A Light at the End of the Tunnel.

Today, the boys can be found all over the world, and at simchahs especially, like the weddings of their children, they seek each other out like long-lost relatives.

"The bonds are so close," says Segal, "that we feel like brothers."

According to Gilbert, 67 of the boys have died since 1945.

They have always stuck together, these children who grew up far too quickly. In 1960, they formed the '45 Aid Society, which made charitable donations and helped fellow members who hit hard times. In 1976, the group began publishing a journal that has enabled members to exchange addresses and write articles about wartime experiences. The society's honorary president is Gilbert, who, as an infant, was himself evacuated from Britain to Toronto, where he lived with foster parents for three years.

In the end, these boys were robbed of their youth. They were starved, beaten and very nearly killed before they were even old enough to shave. But as the boys note, and as Gilbert stresses, they were always able to count on their extended family to help mend their bodies and souls.

Gilbert will be in Toronto to launch The Boys at a private luncheon hosted by Izzie Light and his wife Marylyn on Nov. 14. He's scheduled to speak the evening before at 8 p.m. at Holy Blossom Temple.

Neuberger 'shines a light' on the community

Communities cannot function and prosper without the commitment, care and tireless efforts, mostly unrecognized, of countless hard-working individuals. They are the "unsung heroes" of the community. Spotlight will appear occasionally.

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — When Adi Neuberger was looking for a job, one of her criteria was that it be connected with the Jewish community. She could not have found a better place.

As a communications associate with UJA Federation for the past year, Neuberger, 28, writes for the agency's supplement, copy writes, works in media relations and does "a little bit of everything else."

Adi Neuberger

After graduating with a masters degree in political science from Carleton University, Neuberger received an intern scholarship with the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies where one of her duties was to write and edit its newsletter. She then landed a job with the Canadian Council of the Americas, also writing for its bulletin and doing reports.

"It was good experience, but my parents are Israeli and I have always had a strong connection with and love for the country. The fact that I wanted a job that would keep my finger on the pulse of the community did not surface consciously until I wasn't doing it."

It was then that she tried freelance writing in the Jewish community and became a copy editor with the now defunct Jewish Life.

"Coincidentally, after the paper closed, I met Howard English, director of communications for UJA Federation, on a plane to Israel. He told me to get in touch with him. It was a great chance meeting.

"At UJA Federation I am able to promote Israel and spread the word to the Jewish community — keep them in touch with what is going on in Israel. I also highlight the positive things happening at the agency such as its memorial service for Yitzhak Rabin. Only this type of place can pull something like that together.

"As well, I write campaign update stories and profile different people in the community. I enjoy shining a light on the people and programs of which the community might otherwise be unaware. The agency really helps a lot of people and I am involved in promoting everything we do. I am always at the tail end of things."

Working at UJA Federation, Neuberger says she becomes part of the "energy that is always felt in the air. There is a buzz around here. Something is always happening and I enjoy being in the middle of it. I also feel comfortable because I am at a place where I am allowed to express my pride of Judaism and love of Israel."

Funding to Quebec private schools threatened

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The report of the broadest inquiry into the Quebec educational system since the 1960s recommends that government subsidies to private schools be "gradually" reduced and that a moratorium be imposed on opening new private schools.

The Commission for the Estates General on Education says parents should assume more of the cost of their children's private education. Private schools endangered by the loss of public funds should be "integrated" into the public system, according to the report.

In this time of budget cutbacks, priority should be given to public schools, the commission has concluded. No figures or timetable are suggested, but commission co-chair Robert Bisaillon said he favors the eventual elimination of subsidies to private schools.

Private schools, the report said, are not shouldering a fair share of the task of educating children who are below-average academically, handicapped or immigrants.

The overall goal of the educational reform envisioned in the 60-page report is "a fairer, more democratic and egalitarian society."

The report, entitled Renewing Our Education System and now in the hands of Education Minister Pauline Marois, is the result of 18 months of work, which included public hearings throughout Quebec intended to get the views of a cross-section of society.

A major recommendation is to transform the current denominational system to a neutral, language-based one, and to end any specific religious instruction in favor of greater emphasis on the teaching of civics and "shared values." The commission believes this will make the schools more in tune with an increasingly secular and culturally pluralistic Quebec.

"Schools must rely on family, religious groups and community groups to assume more responsibility for providing instruction in values, religious commitment and good citizenship," the report states.

It calls for the repeal of Section 93 of the Constitution, which protects the right of Catholics and Protestants to run their own boards in Montreal and Quebec City.

(In 1993, the Supreme Court approved the creation of French and English boards as foreseen in Quebec's Bill 107 and they were to be in place by September 1996. At the same time, the high court upheld the educational rights of Catholics and Protestants in those two cities guaranteed in 1867. The Parti Quebecois, elected in 1994, however, indefinitely delayed the implementation of 107, passed in 1988 by the Liberal government.)

A dissenting voice on the private school funding and sole anglophone among the 13 commissioners, Gary Caldwell, says private schools deemed "in the public interest," such as the Jewish schools, are a bargain and not a drain because they operate at only about half the cost to the taxpayer of public schools.

If their students had to go to the public sector, the cost of educating them would then be borne entirely be the state, he points out.

As for the argument these "semi-public" schools are not assuming enough social responsibility, Caldwell remarks that could be remedied by providing them with comparable funding to that received by public schools for educating immigrants, the handicapped and below-average learners.

Two other dissenters on this point, Elise Pare-Tousignant and Majella St-Pierre, say the alternative of private education is a right if the public system does not meet parent's expectations. Parents, they further maintain, should get a tax deduction for the tuition.

French rightists scorned

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Officials from France's far-right Front National (FN) came to Montreal last week to build support among French nationals living in the province.

But their welcome, at least as far as they were concerned, could have been warmer — and a lot more peaceful.

FN vice-president Dominique Chaboche and Jacques Dore, an FN official from the Bretagne region, were getting ready to start a news conference at the Hotel Complexe Desjardins when about 50 young demonstrators invaded the room.

Dressed in "punk"-style clothing, they broke down the door, bloodied the face of a security guard, attacked photographers and screamed obscenities against the FN.

Looking on from the sidelines during the melee was David Sultan, Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region's (CJC-Q) community relations director.

(Last week, at news of the impending visit by FN officials, CJC-Q unsuccessfully tried to persuade the hotel not to lend them use of its facilities).

Although order was restored within minutes after the police riot squad was called in (no arrests were made), Sultan suggested that the violence, while unjustified, did reflect the vehemence with which the FN's agenda is rejected.

Dore, speaking earlier to The CJN and later to reporters in his hotel room, insisted that the FN, which has performed strongly in France at the municipal level and garnered about 15 percent of the vote in national elections, was not racist, only "pro-French."

He also insisted that the FN is not anti-Semitic, saying that a number of French Jews vote for the party and that all of his "closest friends" are Jews.

Such statements, however, did not wash with Sultan, who pointed to the fact that FN president Jean-Marie Le Pen has in the past "denied the Holocaust" and most recently, reaffirmed his belief in the "inequality of the races."

To get Jewish support, "the way they present themselves in France is as against Arab immigration."

That's a sentiment, he said, that might work to a degree, especially in areas with large Arab immigrant populations like Marseilles.

On the other hand, the small number of French Jews who support the FN are probably "more French than they are Jewish," Sultan said.

The FN, he said, is insidious because it tries to put forward an image of political respectability, Sultan said, while it in fact "incites people to moral violence."

In France, he added, efforts are underway to have the FN made illegal, based on French anti-hate laws.

"No, they are not like the neo-Nazis, but they are just as dangerous because they are 'intellectual' racists," Sultan said.

He noted that the FN has not made any inroads in Quebec despite the efforts of a local activist. And even in France the FN remains a "marginal" presence, Sultan said.

Still, Le Pen was among the first to react positively to former premier Jacques Parizeau's infamous remarks after the referendum loss a year ago, when he talked about "money and the ethnic vote" frustrating sovereigntist aspirations.

Greater role seen for Canada in Mideast talks

Scene in Ottawa

By RICHARD CLEROUX

OTTAWA– Far from throwing up his hands and saying a plague on both their houses, Foreign Affairs Minister Lloyd Axworthy says he wants Canada more involved in the Middle East not less involved, as the Israelis and Palestinians move closer to open confrontation.

"I'd like even more Canadian activity in the area," Axworthy said recently. "I want to re-ignite the mediation process."

Adopting an openly interventionist approach, Axworthy admits that the peace process is off the rails, despite what Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat are trying to make the world believe.

"Somehow we've got to get things back on track," Axworthy said, approaching the problem as if it belongs to the whole world to solve and it is not just up to the major participants in the Middle East.

Canada's interventionist position did not come easily. Axworthy had to fight off a circle of bureaucrats at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs who said that as long as Benjamin Netanyahu is running things in Israel, Canada should back off from an interventionist approach.

Their advice was simple. "Stay out. Don't get involved. Let them fight it out themselves. We can only get hurt meddling in Israel's domestic affairs."

Their fear was that whatever Canada tried to do would be misinterpreted by one side or the other, whether it was more aid for Palestinian refugees or quick implementation of the free trade agreement signed with Israel earlier this year, which still requires approval by Parliament before it can go into effect on Jan. 1.

Axworthy has rejected a do-nothing approach, which he feels is the surest way of contributing to an increase in hostilities as the situation becomes increasingly unbearable for Palestinians.

The Canadian government's current view is to go ahead with free trade with Israel and increase aid to Palestinian refugees, which it sees as helping rebuild the peace process destroyed during the first few months of the new Israeli government.

"If the peace process is not rebuilt, we'll revert back to the pre-Oslo situation," Axworthy warned.

The Oslo accord put an end to the slaughter of the intifadah, which had isolated Israel and made it a pariah on the world's stage.

Canada's major contribution to the Middle East peace process has been to work through the Refugee Working Group that came out of a meeting in Madrid held parallel to the last Oslo meeting.

There are an estimated 2.8 million Palestinian refugees in the Middle East. More than half the populations of Gaza and the West Bank are listed as refugees. Most of them live in deplorable Third World conditions that breed hatred and violence, much of it directed against Israel and the Palestinian Authority.

"There's a lot of room for improvement and we're helping to improve what we can," Axworthy said. "It's difficult in the present climate with the closures of territories and when you are dealing increasingly with tensions in an armed situation.

"We are trying," Axworthy said. "We recently opened a dialogue with Palestinian students and school teachers."

Canada also has ongoing cultural and educational exchanges with Palestinian and Israeli participants, but Canada's participation largely takes the form of helping care for Palestinian refugees and about 40 other nations in the Refugee Working Group.

There is an old saying that it is very easy for a man with a hungry, homeless child to take up a gun. Taking care of children, providing food, clothing, shelter, schools, hospitals and recreation,is a large part of the focus of the Working Group.

Canada took over as chair of the group at the first meeting in Moscow. At an organizational meeting in Ottawa in May 1992, a number of lead countries called "shepherds" agreed to spend money on particular refugee problems.

Norway took responsibility for preparing databases listing the number of refugees, their needs and their problems.

France promised to help with family reunification. The United States said it would look after job creation and vocational training.

Italy said it would look after public health, Sweden said it would concentrate on child welfare and the European Union said it would take responsibility for economic and social infrastructure.

Today the databases have been set up, the number of families reunited has tripled and more than $90 million has been spent on job training in Gaza, Jordan, the West Bank, Syria and Lebanon.

Another $12 million has been spent on health clinics and emergency housing in Syria, and maternal and child health care centres have been set up in Jordan.

Agricultural training, public health nursing and construction trades programs have been set up in several countries.

More than 800 Palestinian refugees from the "Canada Camp" in the Rafah, Egypt, have been reunited with their families in Gaza.

The Working Group is part of the "vision" for a new Middle East that Canada endorses. While only direct negotiations between the Israeli government and the Palestinian Authority can lead a lasting peace, Canada firmly believes that solving the refugee problem is no less important and will continue to be heavily involved no matter what happens in the Middle East.

FOR A YOUTHFUL GLOW

Canadian company discovers skin formula that helps to reduce the skin's visible signs of aging

As soon as it's on your face, you can feel it working. As soon as it's off, you can see the results.

Youthglow Skin Formula is a revolutionary skin care product that has people across North America talking of soft beautiful skin and looking 10 year's younger.

You'd think they'd discovered the fountain of youth."The first time I saw it on my wife's face," says Youthglow chairman Dan Cronin, "it was like a flash of light. The effects were so good on her skin."

"You'll see the difference as soon as you rinse it off"

Cronin and his wife Kathy discovered the Youthglow formula in the U.K. eight years ago and knew immediately they had to bring it home to Canada.

Although you immediately see the results of healthy shining skin, Cronin says, it's only after regular use that Youthglow's true regenerative effects become apparent.

In all it takes years off your appearance after regular use. But you have to work at it diligently to get the results, Cronin says.

More than a revitalizer, Youthglow can also help prevent aging in younger women, Cronin adds. The Cronins worked for years with their chemist to come up with the product now available exclusively through their mail order business.

"Kathy's been our guinea pig. Since we don't test on animals, instead, we've been testing it on my wife," he says with a laugh.

"We're a very animal conscious family."

Youthglow should be used at least twice a week, applied right to your face and under your eyes, then you just relax for 20 to 30 minutes. You'll see the difference as soon as you rinse it off, Cronin says.

For Men and Women

"It's a very healthy glow on the lady's – or a gentleman's – face."

After about six months the long term effects take root. Lines and dead skin are reduced, replaced by a face you haven't seen in years, except maybe in old photographs.

KATHY CRONIN
"Your skin does not have to look its age"

"It helps soften the visual effects of severe wrinkling," says Cronin.

Along with the Youthglow formula, there is a facial cleanser and an Ice Gel, with all natural ingredients and no perfume.

Cronin recommends putting on the Ice Gel as soon as you get out of the shower. It helps skin retain its own natural moisture which tends to evaporate through the day.

Both Cronins used the Ice Gel for a year before it hit the market.

A Canadian Success

The story of Youthglow is a Canadian success story. Built up through the recession, The Cronins have established quite a market for their product line.

The original Youthglow formula was recently called the number one "non-surgical face lift" by a British newspaper survey, beating out several big name brands.

"To be an ordinary Canadian family business and be right up there with the big guys, is quite a feather in our caps," says Cronin.

"We're very proud of the fact that we're self supporting and we're employing people and we're placing our money where our mouth is, which is Canada.

"And we're competing head-on with the giants of the U.S."

Youthglow products are available through mail order and can not be found in any stores.

A two month supply of Youthglow sells for $59.95; for a short time Ice Glow which normally sells for $34.95 will be included free of charge.

Fall Special only $49.95 for both products. See advertisement below for details.

YOUR SKIN DOES NOT HAVE TO LOOK ITS AGE

Israel boosts teen's education in Jewish identity

By BEV MITELMAN
CJN Correspondent

OTTAWA — Jenna Slotin was given the opportunity of a lifetime this summer.

The Canadian student was selected for the Bronfman Youth Fellowship program and spent most of the summer in Israel furthering her education in Jewish identity and culture.

She spent five weeks studying with 25 American students. "It made me very patriotic," she says. "I don't want to be American. It's a crazy attitude they have."

Jenna, a senior at Canterbury High School in Ottawa, was chosen for the trip as a result of her personal achievements and Jewish community involvement. She says the experience changed her life.

"It wasn't like your average teen-age tour. It seemed that every time we went to a particular place, we were given hand-outs and we would actually study something about that place, which was really interesting. It gave me an added dimension that I wouldn't have had with any other group."

The group met with influential politicians, novelists and religious figures. Jenna highlights the day she met former Israeli prime minister, Shimon Peres, as one of her most memorable.

"He's very inspirational. A real visionary. His ideas are so full of hope," she says.

The group of students selected for the program come from different Jewish backgrounds. Jenna, who is a Reform Jew, says she was able to gain insight into some differences between modern Jewish communities.

"There's an understandable intimidation that occurs when you're Reform and you're dealing in a Jewish setting with an Orthodox individual who more than likely has far more of a Jewish education, and so there's a difficult interaction there in discussing issues related to Judaism."

She says the main difference is in the way groups see each other. Her experience this summer helped her to clarify her own beliefs and values.

In addition to the books and seminars, the group spent nights out in Jerusalem having a good time and bonding with one another. Jenna says that although few of the participants dated within the group, there was "plenty of chemistry."

"Nobody went into it knowing what to think, and you didn't want to spend your summer with 25 people who didn't like you; so for this first little while I think it would have almost been taboo if anyone started dating, which is funny, because apparently in past years, it is one of the first things that happened."

The trip stayed in the Goldstein Youth Village, a university dormitory-like setting in Jerusalem, where Jenna says she spent many hours relaxing near the pool. They also spent four days in the north and in the south of Israel, visiting the Negev and Eilat.

In her free time, Jenna visited Kikar Rabin, the square in Tel Aviv where Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated. She says that memory has stuck in her mind.

"I felt the loss of a future."

Of the present situation in Israel, Jenna says she learnt that most Israelis were supportive of the peace process, but that the changes were happening too rapidly.

"The added violence now and massive lack of communication between the Palestinians and the Israelis has brought it to a halt. How to get peace is a touchy question, but the general feeling is that they want peace."

Peace process will succeed: Peres

HAMILTON — It may take more time and there may be bloodshed along the way, but the Mideast peace process will succeed, former Israeli prime minister Shimon Peres said here last week.

"There is not a single party, a single person or a single ruler who can stop the march of wisdom," Peres told 700 people at a $150-a-plate dinner to raise funds for St. Joseph's Hospital.

Although he did not explicitly blame the Likud government of the man who defeated him, Benjamin Netanyahu, Peres told a news conference prior to the event that he believes "quite a few mistakes have been made so far."

He said Israel's opening of a new entrance to a tunnel underneath the Western Wall, which touched off days of deadly rioting, was badly timed.

"If it had been handled differently, many of the problems would be solved," he said.

Peres called Netanyahu's razor-thin victory "more accidental than decisive. My role now is to correct the wrongs of the government."

He suggested that Netanyahu should not slow the peace process, adding the government has promised "peace for nothing."

"Nothing will get you nothing. I recommend sticking to the agreement."

Despite setbacks and the possibility of more violence, peace "will succeed 100 percent."

Peres said it's a "mistake" to keep Israeli troops in Hebron, from where they were scheduled to redeploy under the terms of the Oslo peace accord.

Prior to the black-tie dinner, Peres met with local Jewish community leaders, including Patricia Tolkin-Eppel, executive director of Hamilton's Jewish federation, who said Peres told her he appreciates the "special relationship" between Israel and Canada.

The dinner was organized by the Firan Foundation, headed by Dr. Morgan Firestone. The foundation has raised thousands of dollars for medical causes.

Proceeds from the event will go to the Firestone Regional Chest and Allergy Unit at St. Joseph's Hospital and to the Father Sean O'Sullivan Research Centre.

Commission nears completion of hearings on Bar Ilan Street

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM – Israel's chief rabbis told a public commission this week that all traffic should be banned from a major thoroughfare here on the Sabbath.

The commission, which was expected to submit its findings in a matter of weeks, was formed after violent protests erupted in the summer over whether to keep Bar Ilan Street open to Sabbath traffic.

For the most part, the protests stopped during the past month, though there have been isolated incidents of stone-throwing by Orthodox youths.

Bar Ilan Street, which cuts through haredi neighborhoods in Jerusalem, has been at the heart of an ongoing tug-of-war between the city's secular and Orthodox populations.

Violation of Orthodox religious laws

Secular residents view a closure of the street to Sabbath traffic as an infringement of their basic rights. For the Orthodox, keeping the street open would represent a violation of religious laws regarding the Sabbath.

Chief Rabbis Yisrael Meir Lau and Eliyahu Bakshi-Doron were the last to give testimony to the commission that was appointed by the High Court of Justice to make recommendations on whether Sabbath travel should be permitted on Bar Ilan Street.

The court appointed the commission after decreeing that there appeared to be no clear-cut criteria on which to base a decision.

The committee, made up of four secular and four religious members, heard testimony during the past two months from government members, traffic officials and representatives from various interest groups.

Hungarian Parliament backs plan for WWII compensation

By AGNES BOHM
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

BUDAPEST – The Hungarian Parliament has overwhelmingly approved a government plan that will partially compensate Hungarian Jews for property that was confiscated during World War II.

In a 202-23 vote, the Parliament decided last Tuesday to back an earlier government decision to set up a foundation, whose assets are to be drawn from real estate and valuables confiscated by the fascists during World War II. The foundation also will oversee the disbursement of compensation vouchers worth $27 million.

The foundation will be overseen by a special committee headed by Ronald Lauder, the treasurer of the World Jewish Congress who has been active in Jewish renewal projects across eastern and central Europe.

According to the plan, Holocaust survivors, their living relatives and the Jewish community will be compensated.

Gusztav Zoltai, head of the Hungarian Jewish Community, said in an interview that a series of substantive discussions would now take place.

Hungarian officials will meet with Jewish leaders to work out additional details of the fund as well as for the return of property.

Talks between the government and local and international Jewish groups began more than three years ago.

IDF could stage putsch, strategic analyst believes

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – The growing lack of confidence between Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government and the army command is reaching crisis levels, raising the still slim chances the army could attempt a putsch, a leading strategic analyst said last week.

"There is a lot of mistrust now," Ze'ev Maoz, head of Tel Aviv University's Jaffee Centre for Strategic Studies, said in a telephone interview. "There have been disagreements in the past, but they focused on important issues. Now the military elite is suspected of having sold out to the previous government, so its assessments may be viewed as emerging out of a hidden agenda.

"There is a lack of convergence in concepts of the severity of our international situation. The political echelon has been operating under a sense of optimism that the military elite believes has no foundation," Maoz said.

"The military has no opportunity to play the political game to change the situation; therefore, the likelihood of a putsch – an illegal action – becomes more and more attractive," Maoz said.

While Maoz believes the prospects for an actual military revolt are remote, it is no longer impossible.

"The idea looks unrealistic, but the assassination of a prime minister also appeared unrealistic until a year ago," Maoz said.

But politicians and generals dismissed the theory as far-fetched. Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Shahak laughed off the report. Labor Knesset member Ori Orr, a former deputy defence minister and a retired general, rejected Maoz's theory outright.

"The IDF is a citizens' army. It reflects the state. It is so intertwined with the public that [a putsch] couldn't happen," Orr said.

Knesset member Rehavam Ze'evi (Moledet), also a former general, agreed. "Even if all the senior commanders were of one mind, the soldiers would not necessarily follow," he said.

Still, Maoz' comments came amidst growing evidence of paranoia in Netanyahu's government. Netanyahu, whose cabinet includes four former generals, has attempted to scale down the traditional communication with the IDF top brass and unlike Yitzhak Rabin, has kept them from his inner circle.

Maoz hinted that Netanyahu's attempt to distance himself from the army has even caused a rift with Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai.

Earlier this week, Mordechai's media adviser issued a statement flatly denying reports of tension between him and Netanyahu, saying there was a "reciprocal esteem" between them.

In a bizarre incident, the army acknowledged yesterday that hundreds of soldiers attending a memorial ceremony for the Armored Corps at Latrun last Thursday were disarmed because Netanyahu was attending and there were fears they couldn't be trusted. Prior to Netanyahu's arrival, General Security Service agents instructed the troops to leave their weapons on their buses.

Memorial centre proposed

By LIAT COLLINS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – The Knesset unanimously passed first reading of a bill last week which calls for the establishment of a centre in memory of assassinated prime minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Although dozens of MKs addressed the plenum, only 11 were present for the vote itself.

The bill was initiated by the government, but several opposition MKs attacked the right, saying they had created the atmosphere of incitement in which the assassination could take place.

MK Ephraim Oshaya called the bill a fig leaf to cover the nakedness of the government.

The proposed centre would include an archives, a memorial site and an educational institute. It would be a corporation run by a board of 27 people chosen by either the prime minister or a minister he appoints.

Ties with Jordan hit turbulence

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Israel's relationship with Jordan, hailed as a model of its kind in the Middle East, has run into turbulence.

Mideast Analysis

Two years after Israel and Jordan signed a peace treaty, Israel's second with an Arab nation, strains have crept into their bilateral relations.

There are serious differences with respect to Israel's handling of the peace process and of the Palestinian question. In addition, Jordan claims that Israel is not living up to its treaty obligations. For its part, Israel is disappointed over the slow pace of normalization.

The downturn in Israel's ties with Jordan did not begin with the accession of a right-wing government in Israel. When the Labor party governed, Jordan was upset over Israel's sustained closure of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and its air and artillery bombardment of Lebanon in Operation Grapes of Wrath.

Jordan, too, chafed over its difficulty in penetrating Palestinian markets in the territories. And Jordan complained that Israel was not delivering the water — 50 million cubic metres — it had promised under the terms of the Oct. 26, 1994 treaty.

After last summer's bread riots in Jordan, the Jordanian government warned yet again that the benefits of peace were not trickling down to the masses.

Israel had two complaints. The first was that the Jordanian government — which is under pressure from Islamists and Arab nationalists to sever diplomatic relations with Israel — was not doing enough to foster normalization. The second, as expressed by Agriculture Minister Rafael Eitan, was that the proposed construction of a joint Jordanian-Syrian dam on the Yarmuk River would be a violation of the 1994 treaty.

Apart from these bread-and-butter issues, the greatest source of tension between Jordan and Israel turns on the Oslo peace process.

After Israel's general election, King Hussein — Jordan's supreme leader — adopted a dual approach to Benjamin Netanyahu.

On the one hand, he urged Arab leaders to remain calm in the face of his election victory, voicing confidence that Netanyahu would not undermine the quest for peace.

On the other hand, he called on Israel to withdraw from the Golan Heights and southern Lebanon, as well as to honor the "legitimate rights of the Palestinians."

King Hussein made it clear that the Palestinians were entitled to an independent state, despite reports suggesting that he was privately opposed to such an entity. He dismissed rumors that he sought a confederation uniting Jordan with the Palestinian Authority, a position advocated by many Israeli politicians, notably Netanyahu.

As the summer wore on without any tangible progress in the implementation of the Oslo agreements, King Hussein reached the conclusion that Israel was deliberately delaying the process, notwithstanding Netanyahu's promise to fulfil Israel's solemn commitments.

In late August, in a gesture of solidarity with the Palestinians, Prime Minister Abdel-Karim Kabariti of Jordan flew to Ramallah, in the autonomous Palestinian areas, for a meeting with Yasser Arafat, president of the Palestinian Authority. Citing among other irritants Israel's decision to expand settlements, Kabariti blamed Israel for the impasse in its talks with the Palestinians.

Last month, Jordan escalated its criticism of Israel, charging that the unilateral opening of a new entrance to an archeological tunnel in Jerusalem had needlessly inflamed Muslim sensibilities, obstructed peace efforts and constituted an infringement of Israel's treaty with Jordan.

In the wake of the Washington summit, which was called by the United States to defuse an unprecedented surge of violence in the territories in late September, King Hussein reportedly accused Netanyahu of "arrogance" in his dealings with the Palestinians. Meanwhile, Jordan's ambassador in Tel Aviv lamented that relations with Israel had sharply deteriorated, and warned that Israel could not improve its links with Jordan and the rest of the Arab world unless the Oslo agreements are fully implemented.

Jordan's stance is a reflection of King Hussein's disappointment with Netanyahu's policies and his desire not to isolate his kingdom in the Arab world by too close an association with a government regarded in Amman as intransigent.

In line with this strategy, King Hussein visited the West Bank last week for the first time since the Six Day War. In a demonstrative show of solidarity with the Palestinians, he voiced support for the establishment of a Palestinian state and declared that Jordan's relations with Israel were "a link in a chain, a step on the path of a comprehensive and permanent peace" in the Middle East.

Judging by King Hussein's pointed remarks, Israel should not expect an improvement in its relationship with Jordan until new vigor is pumped into the peace process. That much seems certain.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 14

• President Ezer Weizman met in Cairo with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in an attempt to smooth relations between the two countries, recently strained by strong Egyptian criticism of the government of Israel.

• A delegation of 10 Turkish officials completed a seven-day visit to Israel at the invitation of the Jewish National Fund. The trip focused on Israel's efforts in soil conservation and reforestation.

Oct. 15

• Rachel's Tomb, near Bethlehem, was reopened to visitors as repairs continued on damage from last month's riots.

Oct. 16

• Natan Sharansky was one of three Israelis to defeat chess champion Gary Kasparov in a chess tournament during which the latter played 25 matches simultaneously. Kasparov was in Israel to open the finals of the Israeli chess tournament.

• A group of some 60 Falas Mura immigrants arrived from Ethiopia. They are the first wave of what is expected to be the aliyah of the entire community to Israel.

Oct. 17

• An Arab university student from Acre reported to the media that he had been approached by Jordanian intelligence while attending school in Amman and was asked to provide information on Israel. He refused the request. He is now studying law in Israel.

Oct. 18

• The media reported that Edward Djerejian, former American ambassador in the region, secretly met last week with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and then, in Damascus, with President Hafez al-Assad. The two leaders have reportedly agreed to resume negotiations in the future.

Yuval Rabin blames right for atmosphere of hate

"If not for the murder, I would never have become politically involved," says Rabin.

It's not hard to believe him. He is soft-spoken and shy – almost painfully so. He prefaces every answer with a long drawn-out sigh. He searches for phrases and seems very unsure of himself.

"I never enjoy this," he says frankly during the interview.

"It's not easy for me. It's not natural," admits Rabin, who works as a computer expert in a Rehovot-based hi-tech firm. "I'm not someone who sees himself as a politician. I never prepared myself for that. I do this from an inner need, a deep drive."

That drive springs from his sense of responsibility for his father's death – and for what he sees happening in Israeli society.

"I'm not sure whether to call it guilt," he says. "But the question remains: How is it we didn't know what was happening? Why didn't we read the writing on the wall?"

Yuval Rabin

Yuval Rabin is not about to make the same mistake twice. Recently, he demonstrated in Bnai Brak to protest ultra-Orthodox verbal attacks against Supreme Court Chief Justice Aharon Barak.

"There are still threats of violence made against representatives of the state," he says.

Rabin contends that the Netanyahu government is also at risk. "If this government decides to advance the peace process, it will be exposed to the same threat of violence. It will have opponents and some of them will be uncompromising," he warns.

"There are too many people who still justify the murder [of Yitzhak Rabin], who think that traitors should be sentenced to death, and who have a very clear definition of who's a traitor."

A year after the assassination, Rabin is a deeply disappointed man. He feels that "no one paid the price" for his father's death. Of course the man who pulled the trigger is in jail. But others who bore some responsibility for the murder have escaped with impunity, he maintains.

That includes the security apparatus. "Yes, there was a commission of inquiry, and there were conclusions made concerning certain individuals in certain tasks. But there was no accountability. An entire system failed – from the operatives in the field to the top command. And no one paid a price," he charges.

The dismissal or resignation of a few security personnel was insufficient, he adds, but refuses to say what further action should have been taken.

He is equally disappointed by the failure to punish those who orchestrated a campaign of incitement against his father.

"He was targeted – there were posters in which he actually appeared with a bull's-eye superimposed on his face. And to the best of my knowledge, legal action was taken against only one person. No one else was brought to court for incitement."

Rabin blames the right for the atmosphere of hate that prevailed when his father was killed. "I am not saying that the entire right wing was guilty of murder. But the right played a role in creating the atmosphere of incitement," he asserts. "The right rallied to bring down a democratically elected government, claiming that it had acted against the people of Israel."

His accusations are sure to be viewed by some as collective guilt, even blood libel.

So how can he, in the next breath, speak about the need to build bridges between left and right, religious and secular?

For the first time in the interview, he shows some emotion. "Was there a murder?" he asks angrily. "Was there an atmosphere of incitement? Should I ignore that? Erase it?

"If you recognize reality you can deal with it. Am I ready, in the name of bridging gaps, to ignore what was? The answer is no. But we have to go on. I believe we can change reality. If we can bridge gaps with enemies with whom we were at war, we can bridge gaps among ourselves."

Rabin addresses public forums on behalf of Dor Shalom, promoting its three main goals: advancing the peace process, bolstering Israeli democracy and bridging social gaps. He is not a member of the Labor party, even though he ran in the token 117th spot on the party Knesset list. He believes that Dor Shalom's strength is that it is not a political party.

"It can work for change that cannot be measured in four-year intervals at election time," he says. "It doesn't have to act merely for votes."

He regards Dor Shalom's inexperience as an asset. "There are no veteran political 'operators' in this movement," he boasts. In this respect, Yuval Rabin has found his natural milieu.

Rabin, recently divorced, lives in Tel Aviv and continues to work at his private sector job. But he doesn't rule out a full-time political career in the future.

"Never say never." He shrugs and hastens to add: "I don't strive to be like my father or hold the positions that he had. I don't have his background and don't compare myself with him."

If he does delve deeper into politics, it will be thanks to his family name. Yuval Rabin is the first to admit that: "I wouldn't be where I am today – if not for my father."

Israel wants peace talks with Syria

"From our point of view, there shouldn't be any deterioration in the situation, and we have communicated that to Syria, both through diplomatic channels and publicly."

Speaking following a briefing on the military situation in Judea and Samaria, Netanyahu stressed that Israel's hand "is stretched out for peace and the resumption of negotiations, which I think is in the interests of both Israel and Syria."

Syria has continued to carry out curious troop movements around the Golan Heights, where five divisions are already stationed, including two crack assault regiments on the slopes of Mt. Hermon. Last week, Brig.-Gen. Amos Gilad, head of military intelligence analysis and assessment, said Syria had deployed the troops to give it a military option should it feel the peace process has become irretrievably deadlocked.

With this in mind, Mordechai issued a veiled warning that the army would repel any Syrian attack.

"I don't want any tension with the Syrians. I want to repeat my message to the Syrians that we have no offensive intentions. But together with this, we are taking all necessary steps. The army is deployed and on alert to deal with any possible attempt by someone to take certain steps," Mordechai said, following a tour of Rachel's Tomb.

Despite his bravado, some military sources believe that without costly preventative steps, the Syrian commandos would be able to capture the strategic monitoring station on the Hermon or perhaps other hilltops on the Golan.

"But that all depends on the level of casualties they are willing to take. Assad has to take into account the response and weigh whether it will bring him closer to getting the Golan Heights back," one senior source said.

Other defence sources believe that Assad is waiting to see if last month's flare-up of violence in the territories ultimately helps Yasser Arafat achieve a better deal.

Mordechai warned that such a move would not be worth Assad's while.

"I am advising Assad to return to the negotiating table. Any violent steps in Syria or in Lebanon will not serve a purpose, only distance it," he said.

Retrial ordered for former SS captain

By RUTH E. GRUBER
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

ROME – The Italian Jewish community has praised the country's highest appeals court for ordering a retrial of former SS captain, Erich Priebke, for his role in the wartime Nazi massacre of 335 Romans.

The Court of Cassation this week nullified the controversial verdict in August that freed Priebke.

It also overturned a summer ruling made by a lesser appeals court, which had rejected a request by the prosecution and relatives of the massacre victims to dismiss the Priebke trial's presiding judge because of his alleged bias in favor of Priebke.

Relatives of the victims who were in the courtroom burst into applause.

Tullia Zevi, president of the Union of Italian Jewish Communities, called the ruling by the Court of Cassation "important and positive."

Priebke's lawyer called the order for a retrial unjust.

Mordechai questions ability of joint patrols to cooperate

By MITCHELL DANOW
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK – Re-establishing trust between the Israeli and Palestinian forces that jointly patrol in the West Bank and Gaza Strip may be difficult to achieve after last month's violence.

This was the assessment of Israeli Defence Minister Yitzhak Mordechai, who last week spoke at a news conference here about the aftermath of last month's clashes that left 76 Israelis and Palestinians dead.

Israel's opening of a new entrance to a tunnel near the Temple Mount in Jerusalem was used by the Palestinian leadership as "an excuse" to issue a call for mass demonstrations that turned violent, Mordechai said.

Speaking the day after he had conferred with U.S. Defence Secretary William Perry in Washington, Mordechai addressed the role played by the Palestinian police in the Sept. 25 to 27 clashes.

"We gave them the weapons, we allowed them to have them," and then the Palestinian police turned them on Israeli soldiers, he said. Fifteen Israelis died as a result of the clashes.

To underscore his point, Mordechai spoke of one incident that occurred near Kfar Darom, a Jewish settlement in Gaza.

When an angry mob of Palestinians approached the settlement accompanied by Palestinian police, he said, an Israeli soldier came out and asked a police officer to disperse the crowd.

Apparently satisfied that the police officer had agreed to the request, the soldier started to return toward the settlement compound. At that point, the Palestinian officer shot the soldier in the back.

The soldier, Mordechai added, was still in an Israeli hospital recovering from his wounds.

Prior to September's violence, the cooperation of the joint Israeli-Palestinian patrols had been one of the success stories of the peace accords. But in the aftermath of the bloodshed, it remains unclear how the patrols will attain the measure of mutual trust necessary for their operations.

Mordechai also spoke with some frustration about the course of current Israeli-Palestinian negotiations aimed at implementing the long-delayed Israeli redeployment in Hebron.

Earlier this week, Israeli officials had said an agreement on the West Bank town was imminent, but their Palestinian counterparts repeatedly issued contradictory statements and Mordechai was pessimistic about reaching an agreement soon.

"Maybe the Palestinians are waiting until after the [U.S.] presidential elections," he said.

In an editorial this week, the Israeli daily Yediot Achronot questioned whether Palestinian Authority leader Yasser "Arafat is genuinely interested in reaching an agreement," a question that has often been directed at Netanyahu.

Given the support Arafat got from his own people, the broader Arab world and in the international arena in the wake of last month's violence, Yediot suggested that Arafat "seeks to perpetuate the current situation, in which Israel has the lower hand."

'Racist winds in Austria'

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK – The strong showing of the far-right Freedom party in Austria's elections for the European Parliament last week was greeted ominously throughout Europe, with some warning that the party's leader could become another Hitler.

Jorg Haider's Freedom party won 28 percent of the vote in the Oct. 13 elections.

The results placed the Freedom party in third place, behind the People's party, the junior coalition party that scored 29.6 of the vote, and the governing Social Democratic party, which gained 29.1 percent.

But the nationalist Freedom party, which has explicitly called for a ban on immigrants and opposes Austria's presence in the European Union, received its biggest electoral success in the recent vote, with results some six percentage points higher than it scored in last December's general elections.

Haider's Freedom party, the strongest far-right party in western Europe, already holds five of Austria's 21 seats in the European Union's Parliament. It emerged after the latest vote as the strongest party in the Austrian provinces of Salzburg and Carinthia.

European newspapers reacted with concern about Austria's move to the right and warned of a rising wave of nationalism across the continent. The Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera wrote about the election under the headline Racist Winds in Austria. A German newspaper compared Haider's rising popularity with that of Hitler.

Peter Sichrovsky, 50, who ran in the second slot on the party list, will now join the Freedom party representatives in the European Parliament.

CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest

The CJN announces its second annual Chanukah poetry contest.

Who can enter:
Anyone can enter except CJN employees or members of their family.

There are three age categories for entrants:

1. Twelve years old and under,
2. Thirteen to 18 years old,
3. Eighteen years old and up.

How to enter:
The poems must be about Chanukah; they cannot be longer than 40 lines. A maximum of one poem per entrant may be submitted. Please include your name, age, address and phone number with the poem. We would prefer to receive typewritten poems if possible. We will return poems if you send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

You may mail or deliver your poems to:
CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest, The Canadian Jewish News,
10 Gateway Blvd., Suite 420, Don Mills, Ontario, M3C 3A1.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 18, 1996.

Prizes:
The judges will choose six poems to be published, two from each of the three categories, which in their opinion, most poetically and evocatively convey an aspect of the meaning of Chanukah. Each of the "winners" will also receive a cheque for $50.

Only six poems will be selected as "winners". Space permitting, we may publish other poems as honorable mentions. The decisions of the judges will be final. The odds of "winning" depend upon the number and the quality of submissions received.

How the winners will be notified:
"Winning" entrants will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, Nov. 22, 1996.

When the prizes will be awarded:
The winning poems will be published in The CJN of Dec. 5, 1996. We look forward to receiving your poems. May the miracle of Chanukah and the magic of its light be reflected in your poems.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Regie des Loteries et courses du Quebec.

Paris muncipality seized Jewish property during World War II

Jerusalem Post Staff

JERUSALEM – The Paris Municipality controls hundreds of buildings and apartments that were owned or occupied by Jews before World War II, and which were systematically evacuated during and after the war in an organized operation of ethnic purification executed by French authorities, according to journalist Brigitte Vital-Durand.

In her book Private Domain, which is to be published by the French publishing house First this week, Vital-Durand said the municipal authorities in the French capital took advantage of the Nazi occupation in order to liquidate the Jewish presence in Paris' fourth district, better known as the Marais quarter.

Before the war, the Marais was inhabited by thousands of French Jews and Jewish immigrants and refugees who had fled Central and Eastern Europe, hoping to find shelter in France from the growing Nazi and fascist movements. Most of those Jews were of Polish origin.

The Marais became a new ghetto in the heart of the capital, housing some 20,000 Jews. Using the need to fight the tuberculosis that ravaged certain poor quarters of Paris as an excuse, the city's administration planned to evacuate the Marais, destroy it and replace it with a residential quarter for municipal employees.

Under the Vichy regime's emergency laws, 403 buildings in one of Paris' most expensive quarters, bordering the right bank of the Seine, were purchased at very low prices, "aryanized," confiscated and evacuated.

Many of the owners or tenants were dispossessed or thrown out without any financial compensation.

The city also claimed holdings that were left behind by Jews who fled from France after the occupation or were deported to concentration camps. No real effort was made after the war to compensate relatives of the Holocaust victims.

Murdoch company in Israel suspected of evading taxes

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM – In what may turn out to be the largest tax evasion case in Israeli history, income tax officials here have raided the offices of a Jerusalem-based company owned by Australian media mogul Rupert Murdoch.

The raid last Sunday followed allegations that the company had failed to pay taxes and royalties amounting to more than $150 million.

The raid was launched after Israeli tax authorities charged that the company, News Datacom, had developed a technology used by the Murdoch-owned Sky and Star television stations and franchises, from which it reaped tens of millions of dollars that went undeclared to the authorities.

Those involved in developing the technology were allegedly paid tens of thousands of dollars surreptitiously, through such means as stock options and payments to overseas accounts.

Tax auditors also raided the home of Adi Shemer, a renowned mathematician from the Weizmann Institute of Science in Rehovot, who developed the technology, and questioned professionals and lawyers in connection with the allegations.

These included partners from the law firm Herzog, Fuchs and Ne'eman – the firm of former Justice Minister Ya'acov Ne'eman – on suspicion that the firm provided consulting services, even though it was aware of the illegal activities. Ne'eman recently stepped down as minister after he became the target of a separate police investigation.

Police also requested that a warrant for Murdoch's arrest be issued, in the event he travels to Israel.

In response to the allegations, News Datacom issued a statement saying that it was appalled by the tax investigation. It described the allegations as totally unfounded and an attempt at extortion by former employees.

MAKE LEVITTS QUALITY A FAMILY TRADITION

From humble beginnings as a storefront delicatessen on Montreal's Main Street, Levitts has grown into Canada's largest processor of Glatt kosher meats and other kosher products in our federally inspected plants.

That statement speaks volumes about the philosophy at Levitts. As with any progressive company there is always growth and expansion but we have kept alive the old-fashioned values from a time when pride in workmanship and attention to detail were paramount.

Realizing the responsibility we shoulder it proudly, to be a family tradition around the holiday table or the backyard BBQ.

Nothing pleases us more than hearing from our loyal customers that a Yom Tov is not complete without a Smoked Turkey from Levitts or a simcha brunch without our Smoked Fish gracing the table.

Most of this is accomplished because Levitts is truly a family business. Amongst our employees second and third generations work at Levitts, so that time tested methods are passed down from father to son and uncle to nephew; in this fashion quality is perpetuated! Consequently, Levitts products come from our family to your family dinner table.

We work under the strict supervision of the Jewish Community Council of Montreal and adhere to the rigid standards of Agriculture Canada. The two levels of inspection ensure that only Choice #1 quality meats and production procedures go into all the products bearing the Levitts brand. Our adage is when you serve hot dogs to your kids serve them the best, Levitts!

While we are a relatively small company, our products have been enjoyed throughout Canada and certain areas of the United States and Europe. The demand for our products after they have been tasted has proven to us the merits of maintaining the highest standards of production. Only the concern for freshness and the cost of refrigerated transportation has hindered us from marketing our products throughout the world.

From a practical viewpoint, our deli products compare with fresh meats. Innovative cooking and baking procedures can produce an epicurean delight from our basic hot dogs and salamis. As an example, some cooks bake our hot dogs in dough which is a cocktail "hot dog in blanket". Others have used our large salami baked with a glaze of their favorite jam producing a delicacy that competes favorably with our roast beef.

As Levitts expands its distribution facilities, we will be developing complementary products such as sour pickles, peppers, etc., as well as other condiments, all produced to our rigid standards. When they bear the "Levitts Brand" they must represent the highest of standards or we will not market them! From this commitment to product integrity comes our expression: "THE TASTE OF QUALITY."

With the approach of the new millennium there are many new developments at Levitts. You can visit our World Wide Web site: http://netresources.com/levitts or e-mail us at brooklyn@generation.net. We have developed a line of gift packages for corporate and holiday gift giving. Our bulk meat orders for freezer fill-ups are becoming a way of life for the conscientious shopper. We are actively seeking new product ideas as the kosher shopper becomes more sophisticated and demands greater variety and choice. And the newest development is the opening of our Distribution Centre in Toronto, centrally located at 791 Alness next door to York Fish, with a view to properly servicing Canada's fastest growing market with the world class taste of Levitts premiere meats and fish.

Poems on Jerusalem reflect attitude to Israel, Judaism

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Last year, the Jewish Public Library (JPL) held an open poetry competition to celebrate Jerusalem 3000 on the subject of the holy city. Organizers expected about 100 submissions. There was, after all, an entry fee and the "prize" was publication in a commemorative journal.

Over 250 poems came in.

Glen Rotchin, one of the jurors and a poet himself, saw the potential for a much bigger endeavor given the creative spur Jerusalem appeared to be for many Jews (and non-Jews).

He wasn't wrong. Seymour Mayne, the University of Ottawa professor who is an authority on Canadian Jewish poetry, located some 100 poems on Jerusalem by known poets.

Rotchin then combed through the JPL archives, uncovering more.

The result is Jerusalem: An Anthology of Jewish Canadian Poetry (Vehicule Press), edited by Mayne and Rotchin, which comprises 31 poems in English by 19 poets published over the last 75 years.

What was striking to the co-editors was just how much of a muse Jerusalem has been for these poets, some of whom are not best known for Jewish themes.

For example, troubador Leonard Cohen, in 1961, published Isaiah, which romantically praises Jerusalem's beauty. There are other established names like Irving Layton, Miriam Waddington, A.M. Klein, David Solway and, of course, Mayne.

Others are less known, such as Dublin-born Hyman Edelstein whose 1931 work Winter in Zion opens the anthology. In an effort, evidently, to make the bridge between Canada and the Holy Land and the struggle the co-editors discern among many of the poets between their Canadian and Jewish identities, the closing poem Snowfall in Jerusalem by Rotchin, also deals with freakish weather.

The similarity ends there. Edelstein's is morbid — the cold a metaphor for the death of a once-glorious Golden City. Rotchin, 32, however, is whimsical and picturesque, recalling his making a snowman at the Western Wall after a foot of snow during a 1992 visit.

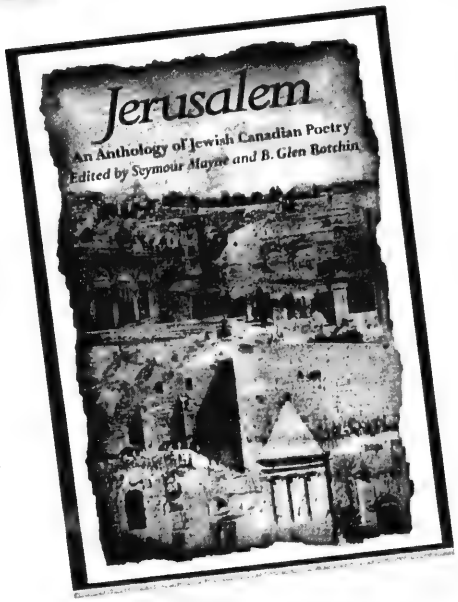
The image of Jerusalem has clearly changed over the period covered, note Mayne and Rotchin, from the idealized, almost otherworldly, liturgical concept to a more realistic one that is dirty and crumbling and the backdrop for perennial conflict.

The co-editors comment that this reflects the evolution of how Jews see their relationship with Israel and what being Jewish means to them. Klein in the pre-state early '40s still saw a utopia of orange blossoms and white doves that lies beyond his reach, whereas Ken Sherman, a Toronto poet born in 1950, describes a bustling multicultural city.

Mayne and Rotchin see the 1967 Six Day War and the reunification of Jerusalem as prompting an unprecedented number of works on Jerusalem by Canadian Jews, and this is evident in the anthology. At the same time, Jerusalem becomes less spiritual and more earthly.

The book's publication was made possible by the Jewish Community Foundation of Greater Montreal.

It will be launched Nov. 3 at the JPL at 2:30 p.m. A launching is also planned in Toronto at the Koffler Centre Nov. 10.



Jerusalem comprises 31 poems by 19 poets.

Uneven film looks at spectre of racism

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Of late, there has been no shortage of films about the spectre of racism in America. Several months ago, A Time to Kill appeared. And now The Chamber has opened.

The Chamber, like A Time to Kill, is based on a novel by John Grisham. Directed by James Foley, The Chamber turns on the last weeks in the life of an imprisoned murderer and his grandson's desperate attempt to forestall his execution.

The felon, Sam Cayhall (Gene Hackman), is a fourth-generation member of the Ku Klux Klan. He has been convicted of bombing the office of a Jewish civil rights lawyer in a small Mississippi town, a blast which maimed one person and killed two others.

Cayhall is a distinctly unsympathetic figure. His contempt of African Americans is palpable and his hatred of Jews, whom he snidely refers to as "Jew boys" and "Jew bastards," is visceral. He is a stereotypical anti-Semite.

Cayhall's grandson, Adam Hall (Chris O'Donnell), an up-and-coming lawyer from Chicago, is determined to save him from the gas chamber, despite his distaste for his grandfather's abominable racial views.

A viewer can't be sure why Hall has taken the case. Is blood thicker than water, or is it simply because Hall is hell-bent on advancing his career? This conundrum is one of the flaws in this sometimes plodding film.

The Chamber, though, has its moments: the tense prison meetings between Hall and Cayhall and Hall's doomed efforts to exonerate Cayhall.

The performances are uneven. Hackman, an old pro, is brilliant as a racist killer, and Millie Perkins, who was luminous as Anne Frank in the film version of her life, is first-rate as the grieving widow of the late Jewish lawyer. But O'Donnell, his laser beam gaze notwithstanding, is somewhat wooden. And Faye Dunaway is out of her depth as Hall's socialite mother.

For all its shortcomings, The Chamber is not a total loss. It is gripping in places. Its feel of the south is sure-footed. And its opposition to racism comes shining through.

Na'amat Sponsors Opening: The Nov. 2 opening of the musical play Still The Night, by Theresa Tova, is being sponsored by Na'amat Toronto, with proceeds going towards a shelter for victims of domestic violence in Tel Aviv.

Tova's new work tells the story of two young Jewish women who fought in the Polish underground in Holocaust-era Europe. A special tribute after the opening is planned to honor Holocaust survivors who are members or whose children are members of Na'amat.

According to a statement, "Na'amat wishes to honor these heroic women and men who, despite the Nazi horrors, became significant, contributing human beings, living creative and meaningful lives. We believe that this is a triumph of the human spirit that should be acknowledged."

Tickets, 416-636-5425.

Israeli Musicians On Tour: Violinist Vadim Gluzman and pianist Angela Yoffe, an Israeli classical music husband-and-wife duo, are planning a Canadian tour in honor of Jerusalem 3000. The award-winning musicians are scheduled to perform in Edmonton on Oct. 27, Calgary on Oct. 28, Markham on Oct. 29 and London on Oct. 30.

Both Gluzman and Yoffe have performed around the world as soloists, as members of chamber music ensembles and together as a duo. Their recent San Francisco recital debut was so well received that a second concert was quickly arranged. For more information on the upcoming concerts, call Adam Szweras or Alisa Siegel of the Israeli Consulate, 416-961-1126.

Music & Activism: Tzedek, the Jewish Campaign for Social and Economic Justice, presents an evening of klezmer music, folk songs and discussion about Jews and activism. Performers include Batsheva, David Wall, Marsha Beck & Friends and Lillith's Triangle. Ester Reiter, professor of sociology at Atkinson College and Beth Shocket, veteran labor organizer, are also participating.

With its roots in Toronto's Jewish community, Tzedek is a political organization that promotes the right of every person to food, shelter, clothing, medical care, education and freedom from violence.

The group "is committed to mobilizing the Jewish community of Ontario in order to support the growing resistance to the Harris agenda."

Firm helps solve disputes

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Cliff Hendler, president of Dispute Resolution Services (DRS) specializes in helping people live together harmoniously.

As mediators, Hendler and his roster of professionals use a variety of negotiation techniques to facilitate resolution between disputing parties.

"In every dispute there is some range to settle. It is the mediator's job to get the disputants into that zone of potential," he says.

Hendler, who was an insurance manager and adjuster for 20 years before opening DRS in 1992, says that when he worked in the insurance field, he was often involved in the resolution of disputes.

"In 1989, I went into mediation on a case and I was given the opportunity to sit with the other side and talk about the various issues. The mediator helped challenge our beliefs and gradually the differences began to narrow enough that both parties were in the range of possible settlement. It was enlightening. I got a different perspective on my job and disputes in general."

The number of would be litigants using mediation has grown rapidly in North America over the past 10 years, says Hendler, and they are discovering that almost any type of conflict can be resolved satisfactorily outside of the court system. "Mediation can be used to resolve a wide array of disputes, including commercial, construction, defamation, environmental, family, franchise, insurance and wrongful dismissal.

"It is designed to help people come to a conclusion that meets their needs, not impose a settlement. If the case were to go to court, the judge would have to determine fault. A mediator, on the other hand, helps make a decision that makes sense."

Paul Nightingale

Paul Nightingale, director of the architectural, engineering and construction division of DRS, says that in one case, a home owner had some work done by a contractor and discovered during the construction period that the work was not being done well.

"The owner did not want to pay and the contractor insisted the work was fine. They needed someone to help them resolve their dispute. So they sent me the information and in one day we came to a conclusion. What I did was force each one to listen to the other until they were able to modify their position. It was done without having to hire a lawyer or go to court."

In another case, a woman had an addition built on to an old house and when it was completed she felt that the wall was not straight. "We went into mediation and through discussions, the woman decided the wall would look better if a trim were added. The contractor felt that was fair and both sides were happy. The woman just wanted the wall to look right and she had her needs met. A judge would have had to make a finding. He is not allowed to be creative," says Nightingale.

Cliff Hendler

Hendler says that in general 90 percent of his cases are settled and in 1995, a record 100 percent came to a settlement. "That means there were no lawyers fees, no discoveries and no waiting periods. It is also confidential. If a professional is found to be in litigation, the publicity could be bad for his career."

He insists that he is not a "lawyer basher. I have had people come to me with lawyers and many of my cases are referred to me by lawyers. The court system should just be used as a last resort. Instead of people automatically going to court, they should go into mediation. Although my fees are similar to a lawyer's fees, the difference comes in the cost of the process. Mediation can be arranged quickly so fees do not build up."

While litigation focuses on the past, says Hendler, mediation focuses on the future. "Litigation worries about what happened, while in mediation we discover how to get along now. To quote Mick Jagger, you can't always get what you want, but if people's needs are satisfied, they are prepared to deal. We create the options with which they can deal."

Notes From All Over

Women Business Travellers: As women move up the corporate ladder, more are travelling on business. By one estimate, some 13.5 million American women travelled on business last year, comprising 38 per cent of all business travellers.

To better serve Canadian and American businesswomen who travel frequently, Delta Air Lines and American Express have jointly developed an Internet site, located at [http://www.delta-air.com/women execs]. The Executive Woman's Travel Network offers tips and information on travel safety, health and fitness on the road, what and how to pack, guidelines for tipping, and other advice. Travel and other discounts are available through the Internet site or by calling 800-657-8305.

New Mediterranean & Alaska Cruises: Sunquest, in conjunction with Alba Tours, recently announced two new cruises at competitive rates.

Beginning next summer, Canadians will be able to take a seven-day cruise of the Western Mediterranean, priced from $1,499 per person, including non-stop wide-body flights from Toronto to Rome. The Mediterranean Dream Cruise sails from Rome to the Italian Riviera, the French Riviera and Spain's Costa Brava, featuring optional excursions to Rome, Florence, Pisa, Nice, Barcelona, Palma and Monte Carlo.

Also beginning next summer, the Alaska Dream Cruise sails from Vancouver from only $1,599 per person. Passengers travel between Toronto and Vancouver via charter aircraft. Colorful brochures for both cruises are available from travel agents everywhere. Early booking bonuses apply.

New Guide to Western Canada: The Off the Beaten Track series of travel guidebooks specializes in describing excellent out-of-the-way spots and hidden places that have not yet been discovered by the masses.

The recently released guide for Western Canada, by Pam Hobbs, Joanna Ebbutt and Michael Algar, includes information, for example, on where to ride horseback on week-long safaris and how to visit the far northern home of the Inuit and Dene to learn about their ancient cultures.

You'll also find descriptions of travelling by dogsled, watching the Northern Lights, sailing to uninhabited islands and beaches, hiking old prospector trails and visiting an old gold mining town.

At 256 pages and fully illustrated, it makes an intriguing companion for adventurers, outdoors lovers and other travellers.

Shetland Whales: There's been a sharp increase in the number of whales and dolphins being spotted from the Shetland Islands, off northern Scotland, which are already renowned for their birds and other wildlife.

Attracted by plentiful food supplies where the North Atlantic and the North Sea meet, species include minke, humpback and killer whales up to 10 metres long. The whales are best observed from headlands and other viewpoints through telescopes or binoculars.

Orthodox Flights: Tower Air has begun a new service to accommodate Orthodox passengers between New York and Tel Aviv. Designated flights have a section without audio or video equipment, in which passengers are served by male flight attendants only. Everyone on board, including the crew, receives "superglatt" kosher meals.

According to a report from the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, the flights are available before religious holidays, at times when students travel to Israel to study, and after Passover and Sukkot.

David Broza returns

David Broza is on a Canadian tour.

Following the success of his sold-out performance at Lee's Palace in Toronto last year, renowned Israeli singer David Broza will tour eastern Canada and appear in Toronto on Oct. 20 at the Music Hall 8 p.m.(TicketMaster 870-8000.)

The week before his Canadian tour was to begin, Broza was to play his peace song Yihye Tov (Things will be Better), at Israel's national ceremony to mark a year since Yitzhak Rabin's assassination.

Last year Broza released two English albums Stone Doors and David Broza. His music is very melodic; a mixture of American rhythm and blues, Spanish flamenco-style guitar and Mid-Eastern rhythms. Most of his songs are written to classical and contemporary poetry.

In addition to Toronto, Broza plays Montreal's Cafe Campus Oct.25, The Barrymore in Ottawa Oct.27 and The Wave in London, Oct.30. For more info. call 416-651-0551.

1000 Businesses Expected At Cairo Summit

JERUSALEM — With less than a month remaining until the Cairo economic summit, the organizers at the World Economic Forum say some 600 businesses have already registered and they expect another 400 to confirm in the coming weeks.

As of last week, 18 countries had confirmed the participation of their foreign, finance or trade ministers.

Despite some recent threats to cancel the summit because of what Egypt perceived as Israeli inaction on the peace process, there now appears to be a willingness to make a success of the event.

Rethink Brodet Proposals

JERUSALEM — The cabinet voted to re-examine the proposals of the Brodet Committee to tax interest on short- and mid-term savings during a marathon session last week. The vote was 7-4 with one abstention.

The vote came after two meetings of ministers and a private debate between Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Finance Minister Dan Meridor, who brought the recommendations to the cabinet.

Those voting in favor were Netanyahu, Tzahi Hanegbi, Natan Sharansky and Eli Yishai, while Meridor and Ze'ev Begin voted to accept the report in full without re-examination. Immigration and Absorption Minister Yuli Edelstein abstained. Five ministers voted in absentia – David Levy, Yitzhak Mordechai and Eli Suissa voted with Netanyahu, while Moshe Katsav and Rafael Eitan supported Meridor.

Kitan To Fire 110 Workers

JERUSALEM — Workers at the Kitan textile factory in Beit She'an are preparing for a long and bitter fight for their jobs, following an announcement of management's plans to close most of the plant.

Most of the facility will be shut down this month, leaving about 110 of the 180 workers without work. The Beit She'an plant will continue to operate its Levis Laundry and finished products warehouse.

The company has blamed government policies, especially the economic program, which has kept the shekel high against the dollar, resulting in much lower profits for the company's exports.

Elite To Sell Foreign Factories

JERUSALEM — Elite Industries intends to enter negotiations with a European food company, in an attempt to sell its coffee factories in Spain, Belgium and France, the company said in a Tel Aviv Stock Exchange announcement.

The European company has offered to purchase all three of Elite's no-brand name coffee factories in these countries. Elite refused to provide additional details of the discussions.

Elite's coffee factories have suffered greatly over the last few years, primarily due to their inability to control the skyrocketing price of raw materials and sale prices, which are determined by the market's larger producers.

Israel's Economy Continues To Slow

JERUSALEM — The economy continued to slow in the third quarter, as it has since the start of the year, the Bank of Israel said in its seasonal survey of companies' activities last week.

The construction and hotel sectors saw the biggest declines.

The vision is strong; the tradition continues ...

In 1927, a stonemason named Jack DelZotto came to Canada from northern Italy. The Tridel tradition began in 1934, when he built his first house. Since then, Tridel has built over 60,000 homes in and around Metro Toronto — including 14,500 condominiums, built since 1968.

Building condos since they were introduced to the market, Tridel has sold more than any other firm. By listening to you, the customer, building homes you are proud to live in, and pioneering features which others strive to emulate, this single company has shaped the condo lifestyle of today.

Following the maxim "quality, integrity and value", Tridel's workforce are efficient, top-level professionals who pay attention to every detail from landscaping to doorjambs. To the accumulated knowledge of everything they have built, they wed state-of-the-art innovation and respect for your needs as a homeowner.

Each year since the Ontario New Home Warranty Program began, it has rated Tridel as an Excellent Builder; and no other condominium developer has received its Ernest Assaly Award for Best After-Sales Service.

The vision of quality homes that began with Jack DelZotto is still strong. Tridel is carrying it into the future, with the Skymark Excellence. The last of the seven buildings of the Skymark Place community in North York, the Excellence continues the tradition of unsurpassed luxury and trend-setting standards for which Skymark is renowned.

Set next to its sister building, the Classic, the Excellence commands a panoramic view from one of Toronto's highest elevations. Most suites have southern exposure. A 29-storey tower surrounded by landscaped walkways and gardens, the Excellence is impressive inside as well, with its lavishly furnished 2-storey lobby, circular staircase and cascading fountain.

There are 191 suites: 7 in 4 different designs on each floor, with starting prices at $221,500. Choose from 2-bedroom with optional den; 2-bedroom with den and family room; and 2-bedroom with den and family room or optional 3rd bedroom. There are also 6 terrace and penthouse suites, each for over $1,000,000.

Every home includes balcony with garden doors; cultured marble windowsills; European kitchen with ceramic tile or mirror backsplash, California lighting and dishwasher; bath with marble countertop; oval corner tub in ensuite; plush broadloom and polished marble in foyer and master ensuite; individually controlled heat pump with air conditioner; optional humidifier and central vacuum; and underground parking.

For outdoor relaxation, there is a swimming pool, double tennis court, sundeck and barbeque patio. Indoors, there is a party room with entertainment system, kitchen and wet bar; swimming pool with patio walkout; whirlpool; exercise room with gym and equipment; saunas and change rooms; ball courts; billiard room, furnished boardroom and 3 furnished guest suites.

Security and safety features are the best. They include state-of-the-art fire prevention devices, 24-hour gatehouse and concierge, common-area surveillance cameras, and personally encoded suite intrusion alarm.

The Excellence is a fine addition to a well-established community. Here, you will be near Seneca College, Leslie and Newnham Campuses; North York Library, Hillcrest Branch; Hillcrest Community Park; Fairview Mall, Skymark Place Shopping Centre, and the Shops on Steeles & 404; Old Cummer GO Train Station; and North York General Hospital.

"It sounds good," you say; "but how to decide?" You don't buy a condominium on impulse; look at other builders, and compare. Tridel is confident that when you do, the Excellence will meet your standards.

Find out what the maintenance fees are, and what they include. Do they cover utilities? Parking? Lockers? What heating and cooling systems are used, and how will they affect costs? Is there enough visitors' parking? Are there recreation facilities and other amenities? What about fire safety and security? And if the project is not yet under construction, can you modify your home's layout?

You will want to know about the experience and reputation of the management company. Do they specialize in condominiums? Check all the documentation carefully: declaration, by-laws and rules, budget and financial statements.

Location is a prime factor. What part of the city do you like? What about transportation, and access to shopping, work and entertainment? Is the site well chosen, in an established neigbourhood with access to all amenities? Then there is the vital question of space and design; there is more to comfort than square footage.

Then, when you've considered other possibilities, make an appointment to see "The Excellence", near Don Mills and Finch in North York. The Excellence sales office is located at 4800 Dufferin St. in Downsview. Hours are by appointment only, Mon.-Thurs. 11 a.m.-7 p.m., Fri.-Sun. and holidays 12 noon-5 p.m.; call (416) 496-8311.

When you sell, Homelife/Bayview serves you well

Selling a house, whether it's your home or an investment, is a major concern. If you want your realtor to look after your concerns properly, talk to Homelife/Bayview's Steven Green.

Homelife/Bayview offers full, 24-hr.-a-day service, for whatever time it takes to sell your house. "There's no such thing as 'too long'," says Steven, "as long as you're satisfied. My success depends on referrals from my clients."

This success is built on honesty and expertise. "I always tell the truth," Steven says: "anything I say can come back to me. And to be sure you get the best professional advice, I always have a home inspector, mortgage broker, renovator and lawyer on call."

Homelife/Bayview has the biggest gross sales of any Canadian Homelife office, with Steven as one of its star salespeople. Yet, he says, it's "more like a family than a company. The older people mentor the younger ones; and I've been there long enough to do some mentoring myself."

It fits that Steven likes Homelife/Bayview: he's generous and supportive in the community, as well as at work. As an executive member of the Toronto New Leadership Division of the Canadian Shaare Zedek Hospital Foundation, he has helped organize events like the Celebration of Hearts dance in February, the fundraiser at Michael Bregman's in honor of his parents, and the golf tournament in June.

Drop in on Homelife/Bayview, located at 8500 Leslie St. at Hwy. #7, on the southwest corner in the Le Parc Office tower; or call Steven Green at (905) 889-2200.

Shrinkwrap keeps your art fresh

Want to preserve your art? Call Louise Joseph, who pioneered shrinkwrap framing when she founded Mount 'N Seal in 1976.

But what is shrinkwrap framing? Instead of framing with glass and wood or metal, it preserves your art (or other treasured object) by sealing it in a special transparent plastic envelope. Mount 'N Seal mounts your art on a sturdy backing, trims the edges with your choice of over two dozen colors — then puts your art in the envelope, and applies heat so that the plastic shrinks.

Air and moisture can't get in, so shrinkwrap framing is ideal for high humidity areas like bathrooms. Shrinkwrapped art is lightweight, and easy to hang; it's safer, because there's nothing sharp or hard to break or cut; and the plastic can be shaped to 3-dimensional objects like stuffed animals. If you change your mind about it later, just cut the plastic on the back, peel it off and gently lift the art out — or let Mount 'N Seal do it for free.

What can shrinkwrap framing keep fresh for you? An old album cover? Family snapshots? A T-shirt with a message? An inspired doodle? Let Mount 'N Seal preserve it as you want it, in any size from 4"x6" up to 48"x96". Mount 'N Seal also offers plaque mounting, drymounting, laminating and creative services. Drop in at 10 Brentcliffe Rd., Monday-Friday 9-5, Saturday 11-2; or phone Louise Joseph at (416) 423-9975.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all my clients and friends for making my real estate dreams come true in 1995/96.

HOME 'SUITE' HOME

Live worry-free at Ashlea Terrace.

Would you like to replace your present house with a modern condominium, and enjoy the freedom of a maintenance free lifestyle? Or, are you currently renting and know that this is the right time to buy your own home? "In either case," says Larry Torkin, President of Torblair Developments, "a suite in Ashlea Terrace is the right choice for you."

On Sheppard just west of Bathurst, Ashlea Terrace is an intimate condominium development where the management will treat you like a "somebody". Located in a mature neighbourhood it has easy access to synagogues, convenient local shopping, Yorkdale, entertainment, the Allan Expressway, the 401, and the new Downsview subway station.

Ashlea Terrace with 6 storeys, has only 58 spacious suites; there are many sizes and floor plans to choose from, starting with 1-bedrooms with 683 sq. ft. to 3 bedrooms with 1,464. There are also 4 penthouses with rooftop terraces, which can be custom-designed. One penthouse is already reserved for the developer's parents.

Every suite has an ensuite washer and dryer, 40-oz. broadloom, marble tile entrance, washrooms with cultured marble vanity top and basin, custom-designed kitchen cabinets, and ceramic tile kitchen floor; and every 2-bedroom suite has 2 full baths. For a limited time, the sales program also offers you 5 appliances and a private storage locker.

Ashlea Terrace looks as handsome inside as it does outside. There is a richly appointed granite lobby; and behind the building is a large landscaped garden, with privacy walls, a trellised walkway, and plenty of greenery. There is also an outdoor barbeque patio.

On the main floor, at garden level, there is a common room with kitchen and bar, available for parties and meetings; there are also separate men's and women's saunas and change rooms, and an equipped exercise room.

Torblair shares your concern for security and peace of mind. Each suite has a security key pad linked to a 24-hour-a-day off-site security monitoring station; the pad also has a medic alert button. All building entry doors have card reader access; and the lobby camera is linked to the cable TV, so that you can view all visitors. You will receive a private encoded remote garage door opener; and the entry system to the underground parking garage will allow you to restrict visitor access.

One-bedroom suites range from $125,900-$141,900; 2-bedrooms from $152,900-$221,900. The larger suites which can accommodate 3 bedrooms or 2 bedrooms plus large family room, range from $259,900-$349,900. For the first 15 purchasers, there are cash rebates from $6,000 to $10,000.

Under a "capped rate" program, Torblair has arranged mortgage protection from now until closing. This means that you can be approved at today's low rates, even though occupancy is at a later date. Moreover, Torblair's bank offers mortgages at 1/2% below the lowest published rates — and if the rate falls between now and occupancy, you receive the lower rate.

A qualified purchaser can buy with as little as 10% down. Your deposit is protected under the Ontario New Home Warranties Program; in addition, the builder offers to pay 4% interest on deposits until construction begins.

Are you concerned about condo maintenance fees? Add up the cost and trouble of house upkeep and repairs, compare it with a single all-inclusive maintenance fee, and the condominium will probably cost less — especially since a free-standing house is more vulnerable to the wear-and-tear of weather, more costly to heat, and often harder to secure when away from home.

Torblair estimates that for an 892 sq. ft. 2 bedroom apt., monthly maintenance should cost approximately $268.00. This covers building insurance and upkeep, including garden maintenance and snow removal, heat, air conditioning, water, hydro and suite security monitoring — everything, in fact, except cable TV and telephone; and at Ashlea Terrace, you can lock your door and go away for vacation worry-free.

Torblair Developments is owned by the Torkin family, which has over 50 years of real-estate development experience in Canada and the US. Larry Torkin has drawn on his own substantial development experience to assemble a team of experts in condo design and construction, to make Ashlea Terrace "appeal to empty-nesters and first-time buyers alike."

Construction is scheduled to begin in spring 1997; occupancy is tentatively scheduled for spring 1998. Ashlea Terrace is located at 800 Sheppard Ave. West, 4 blocks west of Bathurst. For an opportunity to view suite designs and features visit the sales centre on site, open Mon.-Thurs. 1-7 p.m., Sat., Sun. and holidays 12 noon-5 p.m.

Brighten up for winter

Royal Lighting's huge selection offers lights and fixtures to match every budget, need and taste. Says Royal's Michael Gladstone: "Ours is probably the best selection in the entire city."

As it gets dark earlier and you spend less time outdoors, you'll be thinking about inside lighting. Besides many specialty bulbs, Royal offers bulbs by the case; this allows you to economize if your home has a large number of pot lights (some, Gladstone observes, have up to 100). For example buy them singly, and bulbs cost $5.49; buy a case, and the price works out to $3.99 each.

You'll find hundreds of varieties of lamps, indoor and outdoor, from chandeliers to driveway lights, in all prices, sizes, styles and colors: halogen and non-halogen; modern and traditional; table, floor, desk, wall, study and reading lamps. Shades, always on sale for 20% off, you can buy separately. Got an old lamp that's in good shape, but needs a new shade? Bring the lamp in and find one.

Royal's outdoor fixture selection includes low-voltage garden lighting sets, and lamps for your garage and outside doors. Lighting gives you night-time security, safety and convenience; brightening up your driveway, for example, make coming and going easier for you and your guests. If your kids play hockey, you may want illumination for a backyard rink.

Royal also carries track and recess lighting. Line voltage lights, which take regular or halogen bulbs, are available; so are low-voltage lights which have a transformer for a halogen bulb. As a low-voltage bulb is smaller, the fixture can be less obtrusive.

Because Royal's staff know what questions to ask, you go home with the product you want. Suppose it's an inside lamp for your rec room: the staff will inquire about illumination from windows, brightness of wall colour, and other variables affecting the light in the room, as well as your tastes.

"We're a full-service store," Gladstone emphasizes. "People spending money want personal attention, whatever their budget." The staff here are experts, some of whom have worked in the lighting business for 20 years; some have been with Royal since it opened in 1982.

Psychological, social factors linked to eating disorders

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The statistics on eating disorders given by Dr. Nira Piran to a recent scientific programme sponsored by the Weizmann Women & Science and the Women's Health Planning Committee of the University of Toronto were chilling.

Eighty to nearly 95 percent of women are discontented with their weight (a statistic so high that it becomes "normative behavior," Piran said); 80 to 95 percent of young women have dieted; and 50 percent of girls as young as nine say they have dieted as well.

Five percent of women will develop an eating disorder, either anorexia or bulemia, which she described as "fasting, binging or purging," and the number, which is increasing, also represents a younger and younger age of onset.

Serious medical effects include stunted growth, osteoporosis and menstrual problems. The heart, gastrointestinal tract, bones and brain may also be affected.

"Heart failure and suicide are the main causes of death in people with eating disorders," Piran said — adding that the mortality rate is 20 percent.

There are also psychological and social consequences, such as insomnia, poor concentration, social withdrawal and a lowering of academic and professional goals and achievement.

Young women pressured to be thin, such as models and ballet dancers, have an increased risk of eating disorders, she said.

But there is increasing clinical data suggesting that physical and sexual assault, especially during adolescence, also leads to eating disorders, especially bulemia.

Piran quoted studies showing that 26 percent of people with bulemia had been raped, as opposed to 13 percent of the general population, and 26.5 percent of bulemics had been physically assaulted, contrasting with 8.4 percent of the general population.

Eating disorders, she said, are only one form of disruption of life caused by abuse. Others include inflammatory bowel disease, gastrointestinal pain and substance abuse.

A recent study was done in a dance school where the students were young women from 10 to 18. The first finding, Piran said, was that they saw the body as "a site of violation of ownership," including control of their eating, a disrespect for their need for privacy, harassment, constantly being evaluated and abuse.

The body was also found to be a "target of societal prejudices, as once was the case with women of color."

Once girls develop into women, "they are described differently — as bitches or sluts. The body becomes a way of putting women down."

The body, Piran said, becomes "an arena of conformity to social restrictions to be compliant, good, silent, nurturing and sexual to others. Women are needed to be small in both size and in voice."

Women, she said, treat their own body the same as others do. "Eating disorders, then, are tied to human rights and gender equity."

Piran is a professor in the departments of applied psychology at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and the department of psychiatry at the University of Toronto, and a consultant to the eating disorders program at the Toronto Hospital.

Other speakers at the program, held at the Hotel Inter-Continental, were Prof. Rebecca Cook of the University of Toronto, speaking on Women's Health and Human Rights, and Dr. Brenda Toner of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry and Women's College Hospital, who discussed psychosocial factors in irritable bowel syndrome: integrating gender issues.

Congress director attacks film

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO – The executive director of the Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, has lambasted a TVOntario documentary on ritual male circumcision.

During a TVOntario panel discussion last week, Manuel Prutschi described It's a Boy, which was recently broadcast on the Human Edge series, as unbalanced and malicious.

"It's a Boy was not an objective attempt at balance," he declared. "It was done with malice and manipulation."

The brit milah, he added, is a joyous family occasion, but the documentary portrayed the religious ceremony as "a spartan, grim, meloncholy event. Is that fair?"

Another panelist, Mohammed Ashraf, director of the Islamic Association of North America, was also critical of It's a Boy, a British film by Victor Schonfeld which pointedly questioned the ancient rite.

In Islam, he said, male circumcision is obligatory. If a Muslim is not circumcised, he removes himself from "the circle of Islam."

The third panelist, Dr. C. Robin Walker, chief of the neonatal pediatrics division at Ontario General Hospital in Ottawa, said that circumcision is not mandatory in strictly medical terms.

Walker, an authority in the field, cited a study by the Canadian Pediatric Society which concluded that there were no medical benefits to be gained from circumcision.

Prutschi described circumcision as "one of the most fundamental tenets of Judaism and a mark of peoplehood." Circumcision is practised by religious and secular Jews, he said, and it is irrelevant whether it is medically vital.

Walker observed that he was not opposed in principle to ritual circumcision, but he pointed out that newborn infants feel pain more intensely than adults.

Taking his cue from Walker's remarks, Prutschi lashed out at TVOntario, saying it didn't seem concerned by the pain It's a Boy had inflicted on the Jewish and Muslim communities.

Calling It's a Boy "anti-circumcision propaganda," Prutschi said that since Jewish men have "no memory of the event," the issue of pain is a relative one.

The purpose of circumcision, he explained, is not to inflict pain but to fulfil a religious obligation.

He said it is debatable whether Jews would agree to anesthetize an infant before the ceremony is performed.

Walker said pain-relieving drugs and ointments are available today, but there are side effects. He nevertheless advised the use of pain-control drugs should a circumcision procedure be performed in "a medical setting."

In an interview, Rudy Buttignol, executive producer of Human Edge, said a panel discussion became necessary when he realized that the film had offended Jews and Muslims.

He acknowledged that It's a Boy was not an objective treatment of the subject. But it was not meant to be, since the Human Edge airs "point-of-view documentaries."

Sol Littman, director of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre in Toronto, told The Canadian Jewish News that It's a Boy was "a very dishonest film" whose objective had been "to defame circumcision."

He said he was amazed that TVOntario – a government-sponsored educational station – "would stoop to such sensationalism."

The Inside Back

About Life

Dear Ella,

I have a dear friend who has a very annoying habit. She seems to need to acquire everything that I have. When I buy new shoes, she says, "Those are gorgeous. Where did you get them?" and the next thing I know, she has bought the same pair. She has much of the same clothing that I do, as well as the same dishes and believe it or not, she even has the same wallpaper in her bedroom.

She is a very warm and decent human being, but I find myself hiding things around my house every time she comes over. Not to mention that I wouldn't be "caught dead" now in a new outfit.

I imagine that some people might find this behavior sweet or even flattering, but after so many years of this parrot like behavior I am almost ready to move to another country!

Any suggestions you could offer so that my family and I don't have to relocate would be appreciated.

Polly Get Your Own Cracker

Dear Polly Get Your Own Cracker,

I agree that imitating the odd item you own could be considered flattering. Most people at one time or another have bought something they saw on someone or at someone else's house. I even remember an I Love Lucy episode where Lucy and Ethel stood on stage in the same dress singing the song Friendship while ripping each other's dresses to shreds.

Some people copy because they genuinely like what you have, others because they want to be more like you and others because they are too lazy to find something that looks nice on their own. After all, once you see great wallpaper in someone else's home, why bother searching through stores and sample books to find something else?

I'm sorry to have to be the one to inform you that if you don't want to spend the rest of your life hiding every new item from your friend, you will have to confess how you feel to her.

Be brave and let your friend know that you are a "one of a kind" type of gal and you would feel more comfortable if she would try to develop her own taste instead of imitating yours. To get her started, offer to go shopping with her and help her find the things she needs. Give her some pointers on style, matching and show her the best places to go. Who knows, your lessons maybe so successful eventually you may be asking her where she found that gorgeous pair of shoes?

Readers may submit their questions to Ella at The CJN. But Ella is not a professional counsellor. She brings to the questions posed by readers her unique brand of earthy wisdom. Her advice is not a replacement for medical, legal or any other advice. For serious problems, consult a professional.

Diplomatically Speaking

BY JEHUDI KINAR

"Instead of being arrested, as we stated, for kicking his wife down a flight of stairs and hurling a lighted kerosene lamp after her, the Rev. James Wellman died unmarried four years ago."

I was reminded of this quotation from an American newspaper, sent by Sir Edward Burns Jones in a letter to Lady Horner, when I followed the reporting of the confrontations which recently took place in Jerusalem and the territories.

Although I had hoped to use this column to inform you about developments in our region and not necessarily in the political field, I cannot always follow my intentions and my wishes.

While writing these lines I do not yet know the outcome of the negotiations between the Israelis and the Palestinians. Both sides are aware of the need to come to a solution. At the start of the crisis, most journalists and politicians referred to the opening of the Hasmonean tunnel at the Via Dolorosa as "the straw which broke the camel's back," and thus caused the above-mentioned confrontations. Only a few journalists were honest enough to report on what Charles Krauthammer called "a desecration of the truth" (Time, Oct. 14).

I am not discussing the timing of the opening, because there would never be a suitable timing for the opening of any tunnel or any excavation in Jerusalem that would satisfy the Arab side. Let us not forget the uproar caused by earlier excavations (some 20 years ago) outside of the Temple Mount, when Israeli archeololgists once more proved the irrefutable link between Jerusalem and the Jewish people. For years, UNESCO would send an expert to write a report about the damage suffered from the excavations. But, like Balaam, instead of cursing the people of Israel, he would bless the work done by the Israeli archeologists.

Every excavation in Jerusalem will cause the fear of "Judaization" of the town. This of course cannot be helped, as it is impossible to change the course of history. Even if one claims (as some do) that Jesus was a Palestinian, it is difficult to fight facts. Although reading some of the "facts" given by some journalists, I cannot refrain from quoting Winston Churchill when he replied to Aneurin Bevin in the House of Commons: "I should think it is hardly possible to state the opposite of the truth with more precision."

Israel opened an exit to the Hasmonean tunnel after the Waqf had abused a one-time approval to use Solomon's Stables on the Temple Mount as a place for prayer services during bad weather conditions. Over the last few months, these stables, which had been used for the horses of the Templar Knights in the Crusader period (the connection with King Solomon is legendary) were converted into a mosque. Long before Israel opened the Hasmonean tunnel, which, contrary to Arab assertions, is not in or under the Temple Mount, the Waqf, in violation of the Interim Agreement, had already changed the status of the sites on the Temple Mount.

Interestingly enough, the same journalists who denounced the Israelis for opening this tunnel did not deem it necessary to report on the infractions perpetrated by the Arab side. Their papers merely quoted news agencies and not their correspondents on the issue of the King Solomon Stables. By the way, research on this news item would not have been too difficult, as the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz often quoted by them had on Oct. 10, a research article by Nadav Shragai that provided all the background to the opening of the tunnel.

Could it be that for one reason or another the journalists had not yet found the time to read the Interim Agreement? Had they read it, they would have noticed that this agreement does not provide for any transfer of powers and responsibilities in Jerusalem to the Palestinians.

In fact, the Interim Agreement does not prohibit Israel from taking steps that may change the status of Jerusalem — Article XXXI.7 only prohibits the parties from taking steps which may affect the status of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

I am reminded of a story of someone who once proposed this bargain to his opponents: If they stop telling falsehoods about us, I will stop telling the truth about them.

Netanyahu warns Syria

'No question of possible surprise'

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last week issued a clear warning to Syria not to engage in any military adventure, while reiterating his call to President Hafez al-Assad to resume the peace talks.

Netanyahu stressed that Israel is closely monitoring all developments in Syria and Lebanon and was prepared for any eventuality.

Asked whether there was a risk of war with Syria if the deadlock in the peace talks continues, he said: "It would be a tragedy, because we have offered to resume the peace talks and we have also said that our purposes in Lebanon, as on the Golan, are purely defensive.

"It should be clear, however, that we observe everything that goes on and there is no question here of a possible surprise.

"We have taken all the necessary countermeasures for our defence. I stress again our purpose is defensive, but we will not be surprised and we will know how to react to a potential attack.

"What I would like to see is not a discussion about countering a plot or potential threats, but the resumption of the peace talks between Israel and Syria, which was and remains our basic goal."

Netanyahu spoke during a visit to the navy base in Haifa, during which he visited a submarine and later embarked on a short trip aboard one of the navy's biggest and most modern missile ships, the Saar 5 Eilat.

"I want to say, here, while we are on the deck of the Israel Navy ship, that we have a strong, determined army, with special technological capabilities and exemplary officers and soldiers," said Netanyahu.

"This army, which is changing its face every day, can answer any threat facing us. This army, however, has one aim – to defend the country and give Israel the strength and power to achieve a lasting peace.

"The strength of the IDF, such as the navy, is vital to help achieve and preserve peace and these two aims we will achieve."

Infinite edges of a far off horizon

Editorial

If you look carefully at the accompanying photo, you can see the track of the sun on Yitzhak Rabin's face. General Rabin, chief of staff of Israel's Defence Forces, is standing beside the Western Wall of the Second Temple, which only two days earlier had been restored to Jewish sovereignty by the army he led, nearly 2,000 years after the ancient Roman empire had wrenched it away.

The general is looking heavenward into the south sky, undoubtedly into the impenetrable deep blue that seems a permanent covering high above the city in which he was born. By the expression on his face, it appears he is looking very far indeed, toward a horizon whose infinite edges are being framed by the golden glow of the sun leaving its mark on him at that very moment.

In that horizon he likely sees more than most people can: perhaps the soldiers he sent into battle who fell, or the companions alongside whom he fought years before, who also fell; perhaps his parents; perhaps his children; perhaps an image of time's mysterious line.

Eretz Magazine

We will never know for certain how far he cast his eyes. We do know for certain, however, that he described himself as "standing at the very heart of Jewish history." And from the heart – any heart – beating assuredly with strength, giving life, at peace, we know the soul can reach vast heights, as the young General Rabin's soul did.

Two weeks and two days after this photo was taken, he spoke to the nation from the amphitheatre of Hebrew University on Mount Scopus: "Our soldiers prevailed, not by the strength of their weapons, but by their sense of mission, by their consciousness of the justice of their cause, by a deep love of their country and by their understanding of the heavy task laid upon them: to ensure the existence of our people in their homeland and to affirm, even at the cost of their lives, the right of the Jewish people to live its life in its own state, free, independent and in peace."

He was 45 years old then.

The News in Brief

CANADA

Remembrance Day

MONTREAL – Canadian Jewish Congress is urging Jews across the country to join war veterans in a meaningful Remembrance Day ceremony at synagogues on Nov. 9.

During World War II, more than 16,883 Jewish men and women served in the Canadian army and air force.

Hebrew U's Programs

TORONTO – A new master's degree program in volunteer organizations is being inaugurated this fall at the Hebrew University, in order to train a new generation of professionals skilled in working in the rapidly growing field of voluntary, non-profit organizations in Israel. A new pre-med specialization program in English is also being initiated this year at the Rothberg School for Overseas Students.

ISRAEL

Non-confidence Vote

JERUSALEM – Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government lost a non-confidence vote last week and then continued about its business.

The vote underscored how the government has been strengthened by Israel's new electoral law.

The outcome of the vote, submitted in response to the government's economic policies, was 45-43 against the government.

Under the law on direct election of the prime minister, a majority of 61 is needed to bring down the government.

Dayan Attacked

JERUSALEM – Labor Knesset member Yael Dayan suffered burns on her face and chest after a religious Jew threw a cup of tea at her during a tour of Hebron.

The assailant fled after he was brought to a nearby police station.

Chirac Visits Israel

JERUSALEM – French President Jacques Chirac last week called for a greater French and European role in the peace process and for Israel to make concessions.

He urged the Israeli government to accept the concept of a Palestinian state alongside Israel and to try to achieve peace with Syria and Lebanon based on the principle of territories for peace.

Despite his perceived pro-Arab stance, Chirac said he was speaking as a friend, and stressed the fact that France's friendship with Israel is both trustful and demanding.

WORLD

Yeshiva U Rep Visits

NEW YORK – Dr. Anita Rotman of Yeshiva University's Wurzweiler School of Social Work, in New York will be in Toronto from Nov. 17 to 26 to meet with individuals interested in learning about Wurzweiler's summer block education plan.

Individuals interested in setting up appointments may call Rotman at 1-914-254-6215 before Nov. 17. During her visit she can be reached at the Park Plaza Hotel 416-924-5471.

Holy Sparks

PHILADELPHIA – Jewish Reconstructionists from across North America will gather in Philadelphia, Penn., for their 36th annual convention Nov. 7 to 10. The convention will focus on the interaction of religion and the arts.

Conservative Life

NEW YORK – A wide-ranging new study of life in Conservative synagogues has found a vibrant, living and continuity-minded Judaism thriving within Conservative shuls across North America.

The study found that levels of Jewish educational attainment among younger shul members are on the rise, young people identify positively with Judaism, and Israel and baby-boomers who join synagogues are more active and attend services more often than their elders.

Jewish Graves Vandalized

BUENOS AIRES – Vandals desecrated about 100 headstones at the Jewish cemetery in La Tablada, near Buenos Aires, Argentine police said.

At least seven people took part in the attack, police said, adding that no one had been apprehended.

The vandals daubed swastikas on headstones, smashed others and painted "The Holocaust is the great Jewish lie."

Anti-Semite Sentenced

MOSCOW – A court in the former Soviet republic of Georgia has given a one-year jail sentence to the author of an anti-Semitic article that appeared in a Georgian newspaper in August.

ISRAEL WAS NOT INVITED BY SHAH

The Shah of Iran did not officially invite Israel to the celebration to mark the 2,500th anniversary of the founding of the Persian Empire.

Although Iran has never established formal diplomatic relations with Israel, the Israelis are disappointed that on a major state occasion of a country whose history is bound up in many ways with that of the Jewish people, the Shah did not ignore the rigid policy of cold-shouldering Israel.

THOUSANDS JOIN INSPIRING DEMONSTRATION

"The Jews of silence are silent no more!" proclaimed Elie Wiesel at the close of this week's demonstration in Toronto on behalf of Soviet Jewry.

About 6,000 Jews, mostly young people from high schools and universities, assembled in Toronto, with 1,000 torches blazing at the Science Centre, where Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin was addressing the Canadian Manufacturers Association.

"Jewish people be proud," Wiesel urged. "Be proud of your children in Toronto. Jewish people, you have found your soul again!"

The Lowest Burial Cost Available from Any Jewish Establishment

When economy is a major consideration, you should know that Hebrew Basic Burial offers the lowest interment costs available from any Jewish establishment. Keeping burial costs low is in no way a negative reflection on either the family or the departed. Families who have used Hebrew Basic Burial's services have all found that dignity and observance of Jewish law were exactly as they should be.

Low cost is just one of many factors which may be involved in arranging a burial that meets a family's emotional and spiritual needs. We welcome inquiries from people who would like to know more about the option of a basic Jewish graveside service and the savings that go with it.

PQ rejects motion to condemn Villeneuve

Seeks to link radical separatist with Galganov

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — A Liberal motion in the National Assembly condemning radical separatist Raymond Villeneuve for his attacks on anglophone Jews died because the Parti Québécois (PQ) refused to debate it unless anti-separatism activist Howard Galganov was also included in the motion.

Liberal leader Daniel Johnson's motion read: "That this House declares that the recent statements of Raymond Villeneuve of the Mouvement de Liberation Nationale du Quebec on English-speaking Quebecers of the Jewish faith represent intolerance in its ugliest and most repulsive excess possible in a free and democratic society, and that this House calls upon all Quebecers to condemn such statements."

The government has to give its consent before such a motion from the opposition can be debated and voted on.

PQ House leader Pierre Belanger called a recess to study the matter, indicating he did not know exactly what Villeneuve had said.

Returning about a half-hour later, Belanger suggested an amendment to the motion that would "denounce at the same time Mr. Villeneuve and Mr. Galganov," which prompted shouts of "Bravo!" from the government benches.

Belanger explained the government wants to denounce "all forms of intolerance."

Premier Lucien Bouchard added: "As premier of Quebec, I have no hesitation to denounce the condemnable remarks of Mr. Villeneuve ... However, I want the National Assembly as a whole to adopt a motion that is going to eradicate the intolerance in all political camps, and in particular that of Mr. Galganov, that must be said."

D'Arcy McGee Liberal MNA Lawrence Bergman, in a CJN interview, accused the PQ and Bouchard of making "a nasty and deliberate attempt to confuse racism and anti-Semitism with political activism ... It's deceitful and malicious."

David Sultan, director of community relations for Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC), termed the reaction of the government to the motion "very disturbing ... Making this sort of parallel [between Villeneuve and Galganov] is dangerous.

"Whatever one thinks of Galganov or his strategy, he has never threatened any community and has acted peacefully and within his rights. It's like comparing apples and oranges."

Galganov thinks the matter points to the government's being "morally and factually bankrupt."

"I never suggested violence, or political, cultural or religious exclusion, nor have I ever been involved in a terrorist group [like Villeneuve, a convicted former Front de Liberation du Quebec bomber]."

CJC is also disappointed that the PQ has refused to expel Villeneuve from the party.

In response to a letter from Sultan and Quebec region chair Reisa Teitelbaum, party official Fabien Bechard wrote: "You know as I do, that organizations like ours and yours, that comprise tens of thousands of members, cannot control all of their statements and exclude any person who, at one moment or another, would make declarations that don't conform to the ideas, principles or fundamental goals that we defend."

Bechard notes that Villeneuve's remarks concerning Jews and the use of violence were not made as a PQ member but as MLNQ president.

He also notes that the party issued a public statement dissociating itself from Villeneuve's remarks.

CJC, meanwhile, has not backed off from its demand that Bouchard "as the premier of all Quebecers" unequivocally condemn Villeneuve.

CJC has been criticized for doing the same thing as Bloc Québécois leader Michel Gauthier who asked CJC to denounce Galganov, apparently for no other reason than he is Jewish.

Sultan said the CJC request was not made because Bouchard and Villeneuve are both sovereigntists, but because Villeneuve made "racist and violent threats" in violation of the Quebec Charter of Human Rights. The same would have been done if the Liberals were in power, he said.

CJC has received no response to its complaint against Villeneuve of incitement to hatred lodged with the office of Attorney General Paul Begin.

New war crimes cases announced

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO – Federal authorities are moving to strip two more Canadians of their citizenship because of their alleged involvement in war crimes.

The two men both reside in the Montreal area, according to Paul Vickery, head of the Justice Department's war crimes unit. Vickery declined to release further details, saying legal documents pertaining to the revocation proceedings would be released in Federal Court on Thursday of this week.

The announcement brings to seven the number of Canadians facing deportation for their alleged involvement in war crimes. Two years ago, Justice and Immigration officials announced it would advance 12 war crimes cases.

Some are citizens who must be denaturalized before they can be deported, others are not Canadian citizens.

The case involving three Canadian citizens — Helmut Oberlander, Erichs Tobiass and Johann Dueck — is currently before the courts on preliminary legal matters.

The case of Oshawa resident Josef Nemsila, who acquired Canadian domicile but is not a citizen, is also before the courts on questions of law. Antanas Kenstavicius of Hope, B.C., like Nemsila, is not a citizen but he too faces deportation for alleged war crimes.

In Toronto, Konrads Kalejs, an Australian citizen who is not among the 12 cases, faces deportation. His hearing is nearing its final stages as government officials attempt to remove him for alleged involvement in war crimes.

Rabin's yahrzeit fills with melancholy

Melancholy is hardly adequate to describe the atmosphere at the community memorial service for Yitzhak Rabin last week in Toronto. For melancholy and sorrow blended still, one year later, with disbelief.

Approximately 600 people gathered in the warm, protective sanctuary of the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, a cocoon-like chamber of muted browns and beige, a station for private worship and public assembly in which the whispers of the "still small voice" are silently encouraged to find their path from conscience to heart.

The service brought together into one river of effective communal expression the different streams of religious and organizational affiliations. Organizers are to be commended for the example of unity and coalescence which the program embodied. It was a short, poignant program forcefully punctated at the centre like a blow to the solar plexis, by the emotional, pained, insightful reflections of Irwin Cotler.

Cotler delivered a treatise in which he reflected on "what went wrong, what is still going wrong and what we must all do." He began his presentation by recalling three images of the many that "engulfed" him when he was in Israel immediately after the assassination. I reproduce only one of the images which he shared with us.

Along with thousands of others, Cotler went to Har Herzl, the pine-scented western slope of Jerusalem where Rabin is buried, to light a candle and to say a prayer at the gravesite. He saw a 5-year-old leave his teddy bear at the grave. On the doll, written in the pure, plaintiff innocence of a guile-free child was the inscription: "May this teddy bear comfort you in heaven."

The image of the young boy laying down his most precious possession to comfort Rabin's soul, stabbed at my heart. It was an expression of sheer selfless generosity – true generosity toward the other – a generosity all the more poignant for its absence, alas, among our people today.

Melancholy is hardly adequate to describe how I felt.

After the assassination, The CJN received an outpouring of letters and poetry from its readers. We attempted, at the time, to publish as many as possible. Due to lack of space however, many went unpublished.

The following two poems were among those sent to me which I was unable to publish at the time.

We Miss You,
We Miss You, Shalom

Gentle, as sacrificial Isaac
Bold, as Father Abraham
David, at Jerusalem's Gate
Solomon, in Israel Reborn,
We miss you, Yitzhak
Shalom.
We miss you, Yitzhak
Shalom.

Father, husband, grandfather -
"...the softness of your eyes' caress, half smile that said everything."
Cruel is the dagger of November.
Nations mourn. "Shalom Chaver."
Shalom.
My blooming cactus 'cross a scented ocean
– Sabra to Sabra – drapes in carmine your coffin, steeled dove.

We miss you, we miss you, Abba.
A tear from Machpela. Moses' thunder from Nebo.
Psalms from Moriah.

Soldier, commander, liberator,
statesman.
Son of a grieving people.
Your yearning, your vision shall lead us.

Yitzhak
Lover of Peace.
Shalom…
Shalom!

The poem To Cry for Us was written by Noam Reshef, a writer of Hebrew poetry who lives in Montreal. He sent Leah Rabin a collection of poems which he wrote after the murder. This one especially moved her. The poem in its original Hebrew is reproduced below. The translation from the Hebrew is by The CJN.

To Cry For Us

To cry for the man who was taken,
To cry for the fighter
who parachuted from the skies,
But will be no longer
among us.

To cry for the generation
that has grown thus,
To cry for the people
that has sinned thus,
To cry, to cry my friend,
for us.

Marmur urges government not to ignore poor

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Rabbi Dow Marmur has added his voice to those calling on the government of Ontario to respect the needs of the poor and to promote social justice.

Rabbi Marmur, spiritual leader at the Holy Blossom Temple, declined to support last week's Days of Action campaign of protests, picketing and work stoppages.

Instead, he participated in a multifaith service sponsored by the Interfaith Social Action Reform Coalition (ISARC) and the multifaith organizing committee of the Days of Action coalition. The service held last Sunday included music, readings and reflection.

Rabbi Marmur also joined clergymen from other faith groups in signing a statement urging the government of Ontario "not to resolve the fiscal deficit by creating a social deficit in its place."

Rabbi Marmur said he participated in the multifaith service "because the ISARC has challenged the Harris government's approach to the disadvantaged."

And he signed the "statement about social justice" noting "it doesn't say anything about strikes or disruption."

He emphasized that in doing so, he was acting in his personal capacity and not as a representative of the Holy Blossom Temple. He said he wished to limit his comments to a statement of principles.

The statement that he and other spiritual leaders signed on Oct. 15 affirms "the right of workers to freedom of association and to pursue forming a union without fear of persecution."

It also expresses support for "a publicly funded school system that allows all children to develop to the full extent of their potential and to post-secondary education that is accessible and affordable for all.

"We call on the present government of Ontario to acknowledge and respect these rights. In particular, we urged the government not to resolve the fiscal deficit by creating a social deficit in its place," the statement says.

"What is more important to the survival of an Ontario of goodwill, compassion and harmony is a sense of community. Let us reconfirm and celebrate our commitment to such a community," the statement concludes.

Holy Blossom joins program to help the homeless

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Holy Blossom Temple recently announced it will join 33 other places of worship in participating in the Out of the Cold program to aid the homeless.

The program will begin on Dec. 5 and will see the temple provide kosher meals for 70 homeless "guests" and sleeping facilities in the downstairs south foyer for 30. The program will run once a week on Thursday until the end of March, according to Walter Seaton, co-chair of the program.

The Holy Blossom board of trustees agreed to host the program after two sometimes emotional public meetings in which temple members and neighbors raised concerns over health and safety issues.

"A lot of people have a very understandable feeling that because the [homeless] don't look or smell very nice, they aren't very nice," Seaton said. "They equated being down and out with being criminals."

Some parents of children attending the Leo Baeck Day School in the temple were concerned their children might contract tuberculosis (TB) from the homeless people, he added.

At both meetings, a police officer and a City of York health officer were present to address those concerns, Seaton said.

Bill Mindell, director of health services for the City of York's health unit, said the possibility of contracting disease from the homeless were "extraordinarily low." There's a greater risk of getting TB on subways, streetcars or shopping malls, he said.

In additon, the risk of body lice being transferred is minimal given the facilities being used by the homeless and the cleanup procedures, he said. They will be sleeping in their own clothes on plastic-covered mattresses and the surfaces nearby are all hard and easy to clean, he said.

Security concerns were addressed by a Metro police officer who explained that "these people don't cause problems," Seaton said.

Seaton said the program has been running successfully for about eight years without incident.

Despite that, the temple has arranged for a professional security guard to be present overnight as well as three specially-trained Holy Blossom volunteers.

In addition, the start of the dinner program was pushed back from 6 p.m. to 6:30 p.m., about two hours after the last of the children will have left the building. The homeless "guests" will be awoken at 6 a.m., given a light breakfast and will be out of the building by 6:30 a.m., Seaton said.

Seaton said concerns that the program will attract homeless to the area, south of Eglinton on Bathurst, were unfounded. In fact, "they're [already] here. They're in the ravines, the laundry rooms of apartment buildings and in bank foyers," he said.

While there are 33 Metro places of worship and secular institutions that participate in the Out of the Cold program, the Holy Blossom Temple is the first synagogue involved. Last year, about 200 temple volunteers participated in a mentoring program at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church.

A similar number have expressed interest in the temple's own program and Temple Sinai and the First Narayever Congregation are offering volunteers as well. The Beth Tzedec Men's Club has offered financial assistance, though the bulk of the program's funds are coming from the Edward Bronfman Family Foundation and from Mazon Canada, which is allocating $4,000 to the program,

Toronto proclaims Holocaust Education Week

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In a show of solidarity with the Jewish community and to counter white supremacist hatemongering, the City of Toronto has declared Nov. 7 to 17 Holocaust Education Week.

The move will help sensitize younger people to the realities of the Holocaust, honor the memory of the millions who were killed and ensure that truth prevails over hatred, Mayor Barbara Hall said in making the announcement at City Hall.

Pointing to the proliferation of white supremacist and Holocaust-denial material on the Internet, Hall said "it's very important that every opportunity be taken to counter that hatred.

"There are a lot of lies out there. People are manipulating those lies to create a threatening environment for all of us. It's important to see that it's not just a concern for the Jewish community, but for all the community. If one group is threatened, then any group can be threatened," she said.

Hall's announcement marks the first time a Canadian municipality has declared a week dedicated to Holocaust education. It comes about one month before the start of the Jewish community's 16th annual Holocaust Education Week, a project of films, speakers and other programs sponsored by the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

Responding to Hall's proclamation, UJA Federation President Sandra Brown said it is "our sacred obligation to the millions of martyrs" to educate the public about the events of half a century ago and to confront "the peddlers of hate."

Rev. Brian Prideaux, chair of the Holocaust remembrance committee of Christian-Jewish Dialogue of Toronto, said remembering the Holocaust was not just a Jewish challenge.

"Once, Jews stood alone against the Nazi onslaught. Now we all stand together.

"We are determined that racism and mass murder must never be met with silence," he said.

Twenty churches will host events during Holocaust Education Week in a show of solidarity with the Jewish people

Holocaust Education Week opens on Nov. 7 with an address by Kurt and Gerda Weissmann Klein, whose Holocaust experiences inspired the Oscar winning documentary One Survivor Remembers.

Tribute to Givens

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The link between the late Phil Givens (Pinchas Givertz), former mayor of Toronto, and the famed Yiddish writer Shalom Aleichem is that both had "the popular and populist touch," a tribute evening in Givens' memory was told recently.

Givens was a true folksmensch, the closest English translation being "having a common touch," Ben Kayfetz told a packed meeting at the Workmen's Circle sponsored by the Federation's Committee for Yiddish. Givens' wife, Min, and other members of the family, attended.

Both as an MPP and MP, and onetime head of the Metro Police Commission, Givens had a gift for oratory and was so eminently quotable that journalists pursued him, said Kayfetz, former Canadian Jewish Congress community relations director.

His skills at arbitration were so great, Kayfetz added, that he headed the Canadian Zionist Federation for 12 years and kept peace between the left and right factions within the federation.

Givens got his first taste of Jewish politics "in which he revelled" when his father took him to hear Chaim Weizmann in Toronto.

Chair David Newman, who read some of Shalom Aleichem's work on the latter's 80th yahrzeit, recalled he was present when Givens made his first public bid for Jewish votes in an aldermanic race in 1951 at the Victory Theatre.

Givens was so overcome at a performance given by a Yiddish troupe at the Skylight Theatre in Earl Bales park that, although he had already given a contribution on entering, he emptied his pockets "including a heavy wallet," when he left, recalled entertainer Nathan Garnick, one of that night's performers.

A dramatic interpretation of one of Shalom Aleichem's stories was given in tribute to Givens by Garnick.

A commentary on the Yiddish writer by Simcha Simchovitch and a recital of Yiddish songs by Stella Walker, accompanied by pianist Saguv Ore, rounded out the evening.

Zimmerman to head Reform education institute

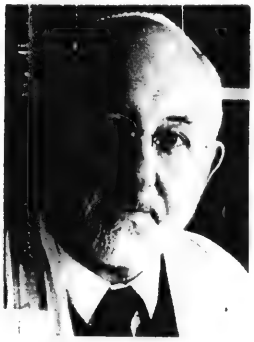
By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Toronto-born and educated, Rabbi Sheldon Zimmerman, an 11th generation rabbi, is to be inaugurated Oct. 31 in Cincinnati as the head of the world's leading Reform education institute.

"I consider Toronto to be one the unique Jewish communities in the world," Rabbi Zimmerman told The CJN on the eve of his inauguration.

Now 54, he decided as a young man to become a Reform rabbi, although his grandfather, Chaim Meir, who was the rabbi at the Orthodox Minsker shul and at the Pride of Israel Benefit Society shul here, had advised him against going into the rabbinate.

Rabbi Zimmerman is the new president of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion with campuses in Cincinnati, Los Angeles, New York and Jerusalem.



Rabbi Sheldon Zimmerman

The Zimmerman family can trace its lineage back to Rabbi Pinchas of Koretz, a colleague of the founder of the chassidic movement in the early 1700s.

A graduate of the first Hebrew Day School in Toronto and of Forest Hill Collegiate, Rabbi Zimmerman is a son of the late Morris Zimmerman, manager with his late uncle, Willie Bernstein, of Stitsky's Textile Centre on Spadina Avenue and later on Bathurst Street. His mother, Helen, lives in Toronto.

He went to the Minsker shul as a boy, when the family lived over the store on Spadina Avenue. Later when the family moved north, he attended Shaarei Shomayim, which he described as the city's first modern Orthodox synagogue.

At the age of nine, he attended a service at Beth Sholom, a Conservative synagogue whose spiritual leader was Rabbi David Monson.

"The rabbi gave sermons in English, not Yiddish, and there was mixed seating, an extraordinary cantor and a mixed choir," Rabbi Zimmerman was quoted as saying in a Reform Judaism article.

"For me it opened the door to a more modern view of Judaism."

Later he took classes with Prof. Emil Fackenheim at the University of Toronto, where he graduated with an Honors BA in 1964 and received an MA in philosophy a year later. He taught Hebrew school at Temple Sinai at the urging of its founding rabbi, Jordan Pearlson, and became a member.

Before taking on his new post, Rabbi Zimmerman was senior rabbi of Temple Emmanu-El of Dallas, Tex., (1985-1995) and senior rabbi of Central Synagogue in New York (1972-1985).

He speaks fondly of his days in Toronto in the Reform Judaism article. "I attended Toronto's first Hebrew day school and spent my summers at the [Orthodox] Machaneh Massad camp, north of Toronto. I grew up in a nurturing Yiddish-speaking immigrant Jewish community."

He and his wife Judith have four children, Rabbi Brian Zimmerman, of Temple Beth Ami in Rockville, Md., Kira, David and Micol.

Consider intelligence, and the role it plays in choosing a margarine. Picking up a mono-flavoured brand takes no thought whatever. But four?

You've just bought all 4 varieties of Fleischmann's margarine. Can this be far behind?

Your kids won't try anything but Corn Oil? You're covered. And your husband, the patriotic squash junkie, will love Canola because it tastes terrific and is grown right here in Canada.

Your critical, Italian mother is pacified by your perfect Pasta Primavera and realizes that you are indeed a visionary.

Won't you look clever when you are not fazed by a sudden visit from your lactose-intolerant boss.

You are wise to have Fleischmann's Salt Free, Lactose Free on hand. It's particularly perfect when someone with a special diet drops by.

You know all the Fleischmann's choices are kosher and non-hydrogenated, so you don't miss a beat when Martha drops by.

Let someone else make Bucatini alla Puttanesca with any old thing. You smartly choose Olive Oil for that certain je ne sais quoi, or 'qualche cosa'.

You accommodate the different tastes of everyone in the family, proving your genius yet again.

There you have it. Four mouth-watering varieties, and endless reasons to want them. Not that much fridge room? With your brains you'll find a way.

You are prepared, even if your recurring nightmare comes true and Martha does, in fact, drop by.

Distressing signals

The signals emanating from the government of Quebec continue to distress us. The government recently refused to permit debate of a motion in the national assembly censuring Raymond Villeneuve for his unveiled threats against Jewish Quebecers unless the motion also censured Howard Galganov.

Premier Lucien Bouchard claimed to be willing to denounce Villeneuve. But he refused to do so, saying he wanted the assembly "to adopt a motion that is going to eradicate the intolerance in all political camps, and in particular that of Mr. Galganov." (Our emphasis.)

The comparison was invidious. The refusal was shocking. And the result, once again, another stone tossed into the well of communal unease.

Galganov may indeed be an extremist. There is room for legitimate debate on this question. But his "extremism" was fully within the law, a valid, if sensationalist exercise of the rights available to everyone in a democracy.

Villeneuve, however, has already been judged by the courts to be an extremist. Here there can be no debate. His extremism was fully outside the law. And he himself has made ominous suggestions that there could be more in the future. In fact, the reason for which the Liberal opposition introduced the motion of censure was the threat of violence against the Jewish people of the province if they persisted in resisting separation – anathema in every possible way with democratic process and the exercise of democratic rights.

Galganov's "intolerance" is toward the political cause of separation, an intolerance which millions of Canadians share with him. Villeneuve's intolerance is toward an identifiable group of people, an intolerance, we hope, which no Canadians share with him.

What does it say about the government of Quebec that they would equate the intolerance of the one with that of the other? David Sultan, director of community relations for Canadian Jewish Congress said it was "very disturbing."

In our view, Sultan was being polite.

...infinite edges

[Cont'd. from page 1]

Twenty-eight years later, one year ago, Rabin was murdered by one of the people whose freedom and independence as a Jew in the sovereign Jewish state he helped to secure; by someone who claimed to know God more perfectly than the soldier, general, Jew who brought God's city, united, back into sovereign Jewish history.

It is unlikely, even though he could see far into the horizon, that the young general was unable to see that far.

If only those among us who claim to know God more perfectly than the rest would also love His creations, His people, more perfectly as well. If only His people too would learn to love each other more perfectly.

The sun that kissed the general's face, that tracks a new path every day in every sky, now burnishes a different horizon.

Questions job action by doctors

Re: Physicians' proposed job action. (CJN, Oct. 24)

The proposals laid out by Dr. David Mendelssohn to those who attended the recent UJA meeting are in conflict with secular and Jewish medical ethics. Physicians should never sacrifice the well-being of their patients individually or collectively for any reason, and certainly not for their personal financial benefit. The fact that physicians have a conflict with the government is no reason to make patients suffer from lack of access to necessary medical services, even on a temporary basis. It is disheartening to hear physicians complain about their personal fiscal plight when other health care workers are losing jobs, needy and deserving welfare recipients are being deprived of adequate funding, food banks are oversubscribed, deserving wheel-trans recipients are being deprived of essential services, seniors who must co-pay for their medications are enduring hardship and many other professionals and ordinary citizens are experiencing financial difficulty.

Doctors' yearly incomes are such that it cannot be said that they are ever working "for free," but rather it is the peculiarity of the fee-for-service system that creates the impression of income not being evenly distributed on an annual basis. Rather than withholding patient services and alienating our health care provider colleagues whose own funding base is being eroded, we should be lobbying, petitioning and mobilizing ourselves, the public and the media to persistently and relentlessly badger their MPPs, the premier and the provincial ministers to stop the destruction of the province's health care and social service system. If the message were loud, clear and persistent, we could achieve our goals in a manner that is professionally and ethically sound.

Why two major Jewish events on the same night?

Every year I notice it! Why do the dates of the Jewish Book Fair and Holocaust Education Week coincide? I see that on Saturday night, Nov. 9, there is an excellent program at the book fair and also a very good program for Holocaust Education Week. Why can't groups sponsor their excellent programs one week later or one week earlier?

Fast track these war crime trials

Over 10 years ago, the Deschenes Commission reported without naming them that there were over 200 Nazi war criminals in Canada who should either be prosecuted or denaturalized and deported.

It is a sad comment on the political and judicial process that a decade later, the federal government is in the process of appealing a dismissal of the charges against three accused: Johann Dueck, 76, St. Catharines, Helmut Oberlander, 71, Waterloo and Erichs Tobiass, 84, Toronto, on the basis of a finding by Justice Bud Cullen that his chief justice, Julius Isaac, was patently wrong to have attended a clandestine meeting with Assistant Deputy Minister of Justice Ted Thompson whose sole purpose was to get the cases tried expeditiously.

These are not abstract and philosophical legal arguments, but cases with real victims and three men who stand accused of horrendous crimes against humanity. While, of course, respecting the fundamental rights of the accused, is it so wrong to expedite a resolution so that at least on behalf of the victims and their families there is some finality? The Federal Court of Appeal should fast track these cases so that at long last there is accountability.

Ramah School searching for alumni

Ramah Hebrew School in Winnipeg will be closing its doors in June 1997 to reopen in September 1997 under a new name at the Winnipeg Jewish Community Campus. It will be the end of an era that will be honored with a fabulous farewell celebration weekend April 19 and 20, 1997, featuring a beautiful Havdallah service, open house and children's art show and a gala dinner and dance. All profits from the weekend activities will be dedicated to the Ramah Judaica collection of educational resources to be located in the new school.

Ramah Hebrew school opened at its present location in 1958 and has graduated almost 2,000 children in 36 years. With these graduates come many memories of days gone by.

The planning committee is hard at work searching for alumni, friends and former teachers and principals, to join us in remembering Ramah.

For further information and a registration package, please call 1-800-463-2495.

Perspectives

We must restore the fabric of our people

By RABBI MARK DRATCH

Where were you? Everyone with a memory recalls where they were when they heard about the assassination of John F. Kennedy in 1963, a disturbing defining moment in the modern political history of the United States. And everyone with a love of Israel and Zionism remembers where they were when they heard the news of the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin on Nov. 4, 1995, a disturbing defining moment in the modern political history of the Jewish state and the Jewish people.

Yitzhak Rabin was a patriot who served his country in many capacities: prime minister, defence minister, diplomat, chief of staff during the Six Day War and commander of the Harel Brigade during the War of Independence, to name a few. He led Israel successfully in war and attempted to lead Israel into peace. This led to the "handshake" with Yasser Arafat in the White House rose garden and a new era of recognition, relations and agreements with the Palestinians and others in the Arab world.

However, the attempt to create harmonious relations with longtime enemies abroad led to inharmonious discord at home. Israel was marred by disagreements, disparity and dissent; torn by polarizing polemics of the political and religious right and left that transformed political opponents into personal enemies; and poisoned by all sides with the most vile rhetoric of words that were inciting without being insightful. All of this led to Nov. 4, 1995, the horrific culmination of events, political ideologies, "religious" passions and emotions.

On the occasion of Rabin's first yahrzeit, let us stop to consider: How this could have happened?

The Talmud (Yevamot 96b) tells us that in a synagogue in Tiberias, Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Jose, two highly dignified and respected sages, disputed so vigorously over a certain point of Jewish law that they tore a Torah scroll in their excitement.

Did they intentionally tear a Torah? Could this be imagined? Say rather that "a Scroll of the Law was torn in their excitement." Rabbi Jose ben Kisma who was then present exclaimed, "I shall be surprised if this synagogue is not turned into a house of idolatry," and so it happened.

Now, neither Rabbi Eleazar nor Rabbi Jose would intentionally tear a sefer Torah. God forbid. They each wanted to protect the Torah. They each wanted to establish the law. Neither thought that his position or his advocacy of it would lead to such destructive results. But the hostility and aggressiveness of their ideological tug-of-war had tragic, long-term consequences beyond the relevance and importance of the immediate issue, and in their fight for truth and principle, a Torah scroll was torn. The long-term consequence: a synagogue transformed into a den of idolatry, holy became profane, the sacred was defiled. Couldn't happen? It did!

It happened then and it happened now. In our own day, we were witnesses to the assassination of the prime minister, and we continue to witness a host of other tensions and disputes that divide us along political and religious lines. Disagreements in Israel and in North America have deteriorated into dissension, distinctiveness has corrupted into contentiousness and splits have eroded into schisms. Many of the details are known and need not be recounted. What is important is that a Torah scroll was torn in our excitement.

While there have always been disagreements in the past, they have rarely reached such heated heights or descended into such depths of discord as have the disparities of the last few years. One of the disturbing elements of this disunity is that it was — and continues to be — based on principle, with each party knowing that he, and only he, is right and that his ideas, and only his ideas, are the correct ones. The opinions of others are irrelevant at best, blasphemous at worst. Compromise and accommodation are impossible. We have become a house divided against itself, and in many ways have created a climate of sinat chinam, wanton hatred, the kind that destroyed the Second Temple.

Do not misunderstand. I am not advocating the abandonment of principle or the acceptance of a meaningless political and religious relativism. Abraham Lincoln put it well in his second inaugural address when he said that we must strive "with firmness for the right as God gives us to see right" and we must articulate our beliefs, values, opinions and ideals and work hard to establish them.

But in doing so, we must keep in mind that others may be as committed and concerned as we, and that they may very well have something worthwhile to contribute to the marketplace of ideas. And we must keep in mind all of our values and remember all of the ends we hope to achieve. In fighting for religious principle, we must remember that ahavat Yisrael, the love of all Jews, is also a religious principle. In advocating the godly, we must bear in mind that derech eretz and mentshlechkeit are also divine. In fighting for the integrity of Israel, we must never sacrifice her people or her past. We must always consider carefully the consequences of our actions.

What is ahead? To continue the sefer Torah metaphor: What do we do with the torn remnants of the sefer Torah, with the ripped pieces of the fabric of our people that each of us holds in our hands? Of course, we are saddened that we have descended to such depths of demonization and debasement. Jewish law even dictates that those who see a scroll that is torn must themselves tear keriah, rend their clothes, as a sign of mourning.

But it is forbidden to leave a sefer Torah in a state of degraded disrepair, it must be mended. But — and here's the rub — not all Torahs can be repaired. If the damage is too extensive, it cannot be fixed. And when the integrity of the scroll is so bad that it can no longer be used, there is no alternative but genizah, to bury the Torah with dignity.

What is the state of the sefer Torah of Israel and of the Jewish community today? Can its torn parchment be sewn or have the issues that divide us irreversibly torn us apart? Has our heated and often angry tug-of-war over political and religious principle irreparably split our scroll and severed our souls?

Despite the continuing tensions and the fundamental issues about which we disagree — be they political, religious or personal — the Torah of our people, of our religion and of our history is not and cannot ever be considered to be beyond repair. We can never allow it! The Torah of our people, of our religion and of our history cannot and can never be buried in some genitzah, left to decay. But we must be realistic and understand that if we fail to moderate our rhetoric, the breach may become irreparable. And we dare not allow it!

If our Torah is torn, we must resew it. If its letters are broken, we must make them whole. If the parchment is destroyed, we must replace it.

Eit likroa v'eit litfor. "There is a time to rend and there is a time to sew." Following this period of rending is the time for us to gather the scattered remnants of our people and the divided pieces of our community and, with stitches of sensitive words and seams of responsible actions, carefully and lovingly restore the fabric of our people, of Israel and of our Torah.

This is a hard task, but it is one that we must learn to complete successfully. The most important lesson is to prevent the schisms from happening in the first place. We must treat each other with at least as much dignity and respect as we treat a sefer Torah. And we can learn to prevent such damage to our community by protecting each other from injury as carefully as we protect a sefer Torah from injury. After all, it was the tug-of-war over personal principle and ideas that caused that sefer Torah in Tiberias to be torn. We must take the larger view so that we can analyze our positions, our actions and their consequences in the context of all of the religious and political values that are dear to us.

Abraham Lincoln concluded that inaugural address with the famous lines that are so appropriate for us today:

With malice toward none, with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan — to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all nations.

The proper observance of Rabin's yahrzeit is for us to commit ourselves to the restoration of the fabric of Israeli and Jewish life. If we succeed in doing so, we will once again read our scroll, be inspired by its message, and we will be able to recite with confidence:

Eitz chayyim hi — the Torah is a tree of life to all who grasp it, and all who support it are fortunate. When can such blessings be fulfilled? Deracheha darchei noam — only when all of its different paths and perspectives are expressed with integrity and pleasantness, and all of its divergent and diverse ways are peaceful.

Israel is a work in progress

ISRAEL DIARY PART I

It's only a few hours from Prague to Israel, but the green of Europe quickly vanishes to be replaced by the burnt-brown hills of Israel. In the next few articles, I would like to describe some of the people I met and the issues they are raising in today's Israel.

By Joan M. Gerber

Israel is a work in progress. As we drive through the countryside to our first stop in Ramat Ha-Sharon, our friend warns us – you won't recognize the place. And is he right! Where in 1981, there were fields and fig trees, there are now villas and high-rise apartments. This was the first of many indications that growth of the population in Israel is a major factor both in economic boom and, for some, who are unable to adjust to the changes, in psychological bust. We are stunned here and later, as we travel to Nahariya, Ashkelon and Jerusalem, at the building explosion (it's too big for a simple boom).

Beside Nahariya, once a sleepy town with cafes and evening rides in horse-drawn carriages, a whole new second town is being created. Ditto in Ashkelon, where thousands of people will live and stroll the beaches. A high-speed train will carry them to and from work in Tel Aviv. While Russian signs are everywhere, the countryside is a veritable babel of languages – French, Russian, and English and Hebrew of many accents. What do we share in common?

And Jerusalem? Words fail as one climbs from Beit Shemesh (with its own new suburbs) to the entrance to Jerusalem below Givat Shaul. On the hills where once remote Ramot looked onto the barren hillside as far as the minaret of Nebi Samweel, gleaming new hillside buildings stand. There seem to be no trees anywhere among them. No matter. If you build it in Jerusalem, people will come, in droves, to live in it.

In the early '30s the British announced that Palestine was full. The population of less than one million, a majority of them Arabs, was as much as the country could sustain. This attitude was, of course, vehemently opposed by Zionists who saw the land as the fulfilment of a dream and, as the decade progressed, as the only refuge against Hitler. Today the land has over five million inhabitants, and one study projects a population of eight million in Israel and four million in a Palestinian state by the year 2020!

From the days of the Second Temple we prayed for the return to Zion and now that it has become a reality, we can look forward to the time when no Jew will live in a country of oppression, when all will have the opportunity to go up to the land of Israel, and for the first time since the Babylonian exile, more Jews will live in Israel than in any other country in the world. But a little voice warns us – be careful what you want because you might get it.

Growth and peace come with a price. Old-timers grumble about the decline of Zionist virtues. There is a sense of loss of something indefinable and a feeling of being constricted, squeezed into a smaller space now that three-quarters of a million newcomers are sharing that space.

Ironically, this sounds like the opinions of Canadian Jews after 1880, as the wave of eastern European Jewish immigrants began to wash ashore.

But there are real concerns. How will the fragile environment be served by development? What will be the outcome of the intense political battles being waged behind the expansion of cities, roads and industry? Here the economy is really part of a political agenda for expanding the state, holding on to the territories or letting go of them, letting the Palestinians in to work or keeping them out and letting in other foreign workers who live in squalor in hope of quick financial rewards.

There are over 250,000 foreign workers in Israel, at least half of them illegal. Not only does Israel have to define itself anew, but it has to decide what to do with a very large segment of the population which is there solely to do hard labor or low-paying service jobs and whom the state has no intention of allowing to stay on indefinitely.

Add to this the stresses revealed by the recent elections – between secular and religious, and between religious and religious, and you have a very heady mix of issues to discuss around the campfire and coffee cup.

Yitzhak Rabin – one year later

At the end of Shabbat, on Nov. 4 last year, Yitzhak Rabin, prime minister of Israel, was gunned down by a Jew. On Monday, the day of his funeral, mass rallies were held all over the world, and some 7,000 people turned out in Toronto. What follows are excerpts from the memorial address I delivered that night. I hope they may recapture a little of our sorrow.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

At 7 o'clock this morning, Toronto time, life stood still in Israel, where it was 2 p.m. and Yitzhak Rabin was about to be buried. I felt I too was there as I heard the sound of the sirens and watched the assembled get to their feet. Instinctively I too got up, and as I did I cried. Like Rabin, I was once a soldier and don't cry often any more; today I did — and the sirens still wail in my ears.

I wept like David when he heard of the deaths of Saul and Jonathan, and in the language of David I say: Eich nafal hagibor, How has the mighty one fallen, tzar li aleicha achi Yitzhak, I grieve for you, my brother Yitzhak. I knew you in life and you remain my brother in death.

The assassin thought he had heard the word of God. How could he come to this dreadful conclusion, and even now assert that he is glad to have done what he did and only regrets that he failed to kill Shimon Peres as well? Because he belongs to those who don't believe in argument or democratic give-and-take.

More than that: the gunman does not understand what Judaism is all about. For in addition to Torah and the rest of Tanach, what is the great document by which our people have lived? It is the Talmud, and that huge compendium is essentially a record of argument and counter-argument, of weighing one idea against another. Our sages insisted on reminding us that in the service of God and Israel, elu va'elu divrei Elokim Chayim, both sides of the issue are words of the Living God. Words, not violence.

But words too can breed violence. When you call the prime minister of Israel "traitor" and "murderer," sooner or later someone will come and take the defamation to heart. And someone did, alas, and now the prime minister is dead. There is double reason to remember the warning of our sages: Chachamim, hiz'haru bedivreichem, you who guide the people, watch your words!

Israelis have learned to guard against external enemies, not against one of their own. Now they are like other nations in this way too — chaval.

Still, the death of Rabin has reminded all of us once again that we are one people, united in our love for Israel. Look about you and feel the warmth of love — a love inspiring also the thousands who stand outside in the cold and proclaim their sorrow ... We haven't met like this for a long time; it took murder most foul to bring us together. Let us not wait for the next tragedy; rather, may we assemble the next time out of our mutual love and common hope.

Whether we as a people shall live is up to God; but whether we shall live as one people or divided against one another, is up to us ... Let our finale reflect both heaven and earth. Am Yisrael chai!

An astute observer of Jewish people

His name is not widely known outside of academe but I have no doubt that Sander L. Gilman will be recognized in the next century as one of the most astute observers of the Jewish people in our time.

By Arnold Ages

Gilman has the unusual distinction of being the Henry R. Luce Professor of the Liberal Arts in Human Biology at the University of Chicago. Unfortunately, this professional designation obscures the fact that Gilman possesses an intimidating knowledge of history, medicine, psychiatry, sociology, literature, religion, esthetics, linguistics, chemistry, physiology, theatre and cinema — not to speak of his immense learning in such esoteric fields as craniology and semiotics.

In the many books he has published in the last two decades, Gilman has used many of the above disciplines to analyse and dissect the Jewish condition in the last 100 years. His books are not easy to read. They require a significant investment of time and energy, but the dividends are priceless because Gilman is one of the few original thinkers of our time. I would nominate him for the post of "thinker-laureate" of the modern age.

For obvious reasons, Gilman has been interested in that non-filterable virus known as anti-Semitism and he has sought to isolate and explain its many ugly contours, especially as they manifested themselves in European (especially Viennese) society in the latter part of the 19th century. Using his vast knowledge of the history of medicine, Gilman has shown how the most scientifically advanced civilization of that day entertained and promoted physiological theories about Jewish deformities so ludicrous that they would be laughable — had they not been accepted by minds attuned to hatred of Jews.

Sigmund Freud grew up and matured in that intellectual matrix and produced the epoch-making science of psychotherapy, a science of the mind designed to cure and rehabilitate the unbalanced and the emotionally fragmented. Gilman, having read carefully all the relevant works by Freud and his contemporaries and having digested libraries of books on the era, makes the astounding claim in one of his studies that Freud's invention of the jargon of psychotherapy was designed in part to parry the anti-Semitism of the epoch by generalizing negative portraits of the Jews into identikits of man-in-general.

In Gilman's scenario, Freud leapfrogged over the culturally saturated German language with its built-in bias against Jews, and created the new language of psychoanalysis with its Greek myths and oedipal archetypes. He also suggests that the language of psychotherapy was a surrogate for the Yiddish and Hebrew that assimilated Jews had rejected.

It is in Gilman's pursuit of the assimilated Jew that we find one of his most stunning revelations. Last year, he published a book on Franz Kafka, the German-speaking Czech Jew whose novellas and short stories are considered to be among the most influential works of fiction of the 20th century.

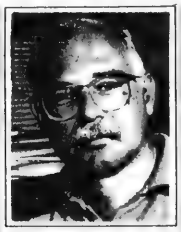
Literary critics have been trying for 50 years to understand the meaning of The Metamorphosis, the story of a man who wakes up one day to discover that he has turned into a centipede and cannot, with his 100 legs, get out of bed. Critics have exhausted their interpretive skills in trying to decipher the symbolism behind that shocking image of the man-insect. Gilman says that Georg Samsa's plight is that of the Jew who converts to Christianity — with the resulting grotesquely disabling condition. For Gilman, Jews who try to cross into gentile society are "cultural cross-dressers," to use his phrase.

Last month the University of Nebraska Press published the latest of Gilman's bold inquiries into the Jewish condition. It is called Smart Jews and in this groundbreaking essay, he brings to bear again an exhaustive excavation of sources and a keen analytical sense. He shows here that the much-touted idea of Jewish intellectual superiority has deep roots in western European culture, and demonstrates that there were many scientific theories to buttress the racial component of the idea. But there were equally strong trends among both Jews and gentiles to downplay the claims of Jewish intelligence by characterizing it as cleverness rather than intellectual originality.

In his latest foray, however, Gilman skilfully traces the way in which ideas about Jewish intelligence are filtered through modern literature, opera, art and films — not always to the benefit of Jews. Praise for Jews in this regard is often a mask for a more subtle form of anti-Semitism in which Jewish intelligence is equated with a lack of moral virtue.

The Kirshner File

Academic mixes political science, psychoanalysis



By Sheldon Kirshner

World leaders supposedly make foreign policy decisions on the basis of domestic constraints, economic and political factors and strategic imperatives. In the modern era, however, this cardinal rule has been broken more than once. Just think of the disastrous gambits of Adolf Hitler in the Soviet Union and Saddam Hussein in Iran and Kuwait. But in the main, this theory has withstood the test of time.

More than a decade ago, a McGill University political scientist named Blema Steinberg seriously began to question this enduring dogma. No longer was she convinced that presidents, prime ministers or chancellors act solely out of cool rationality. Maybe personality had something to do with it.

Influenced by theorists like Harold Lasswell, Fred Greenstein and Alexander and Juliet George, Steinberg gradually came to believe that psychoanalytic elements should be factored into the equation. "The more I read, the more I felt, 'There's something to this.' "

In 1984, Steinberg enrolled at the Canadian Institute of Psychoanalysis in Montreal. Five years later, she was a full-fledged psychoanalyst. Today she is one of only half a dozen researchers in North America trained in both political science and psychoanalysis.

Thanks in large part to this rigorous training, Steinberg — an associate professor who specializes in U.S. foreign policy — has written a provocative book entitled Shame and Humiliation: Presidential Decision Making On Vietnam (McGill-Queen's University Press).

"As someone whose formative years as a young academic were shaped by the intense debate over the Vietnam War, it seemed to me that that conflict provided a textbook example of the way in which the character and personality of successive presidents had played a significant role in shaping political decisions," she writes in the preface.

Steinberg, who holds a PhD in international relations from McGill, zeroes in on three presidents: Dwight Eisenhower, Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon. (She leaves out John Kennedy because, while he increased the number of American advisors in Vietnam, his assassination spared him the headache of having to decide whether or not to escalate the war by sending in foot soldiers.)

Providing case studies of Eisenhower, Johnson and Nixon, Steinberg describes the childhood, maturation and career of each president, showing how each man's personality had a bearing on his respective Vietnam policy.

According to Steinberg, Eisenhower was reluctant to get too involved in the war because his healthy self-confidence and strong sense of identity enabled him to analyse the issues in a completely rational manner.

Eisenhower, she adds, was psychologically secure and was able to carry out a careful and thoughtful analysis of the problems he faced in Southeast Asia.

Johnson and Nixon, being exceedingly narcissistic, were assailed by self-doubts and acted aggressively in order to dispel perceptions of weakness.

"Narcissistic personalities are characterized by intense self-involvement and an inordinate preoccupation with success and fame," she writes. "Achievements often become a substitute for the love they failed to receive, and their interpersonal relations are frequently marked by a lack of empathy for other people. They oscillate between feelings of grandiosity and omnipotence ... and feelings of inferiority and low self-steem.

"Because of their need to accomplish, to feel superior and to be acclaimed, they are particularly susceptible to feelings of shame and humiliation."

Steinberg, who is probably the only academic in Canada who melds political science with psychoanalysis, is perfectly aware that her spin on events is not shared by most political scientists.

"Not everyone appreciates it," she readily acknowledged. But she thinks that the majority of her McGill colleagues are supportive of her work.

To head off inevitable criticism, she offers a disclaimer in Shame and Humiliation: "My argument is not designed as a substitute for any of the alternative explanations of the Vietnam War. Instead, its more modest goal is to complement them through an exploration of the psychodynamic context in which all these variables may have been operative."

Be that as it may, Steinberg is of the opinion that the application of psychoanalysis to political science is gaining momentum. "As an intellectual discipline, it does seem to be growing," she said in an interview in her Toronto publicist's house. Apart from political scientists like herself, historians, philosophers and literary critics have adopted this mode of inquiry. "It seems like a natural fit," observed Steinberg, a stylish woman in her early 60s.

Nonetheless, Steinberg's initiation into the ranks of a new discipline, 20 years after she had completed her doctorate in political science, was an arduous one. As she put it, "Retooling was a lot more difficult than I expected."

Colleagues supportive

Inexhaustible intellectual curiosity is the acme of a prototypical academic. Yet, during her quest to master the intricacies of psychoanalysis, there were moments when she felt overwhelmed by the sheer quantity of the literature.

Steinberg's immersion in the labyrinths of psychoanalysis has changed her for life. "It has softened me and made me less judgmental. It has given me an awareness that patterns of behavior are not accidental and are frequently a response to earlier traumas."

Steinberg practises her psychoanalytical skills not only on campus and in books, but in a private practice and in a seminar and a research program at the Jewish General Hospital.

In general, she devotes about 15 hours a week to off-campus activities. This hectic schedule regretfully means that she cannot always attend to her interests in golf and downhill skiing or to cultivate her friendships.

The mother of three grown children (Margot, an actress with a Harvard MBA degree; Donna, a clinical psychologist; and Adam, a businessman), she is married to Arnold Steinberg, the former senior vice-president of the now-defunct Steinberg food store chain.

In her preface to Shame and Humiliation, Steinberg praises her husband for his editorial suggestions, his love and his belief in her manuscript. She will doubtless rely on these qualities again now that she has decided to write another book on American politics.

Steinberg's new volume will deal with the modern presidency and the effect of family relationships on character and leadership. And if it is as stimulating as Shame and Humiliation, Steinberg may well be hailed as one of the chief practitioners and exponents of political science with a psychoanalytical twist.

A treasure trove for historians

Roots & Remembrance

By ZE'EV GLICENSTEIN

As chilly winds pluck the last of this season's autumn leaves from the trees, I have been turning over some other leaves – weathered pages from the records of the Young Hebrew Men's Benevolent Society of Montreal (YHMBS), the Jewish Colonization Association and the Montreal branch of the Paris-based Baron de Hirsch Institute (BHI).

Preserved in a set of eight microfilms from the National Archives, the records are a treasure trove for historians – and genealogists whose ancestors may have reached Canada in the 1880s, 1890s and early 1900s. The BHI provided seed money for many Jewish immigrants to become farmers in Canada's vast uncharted North West. Excerpts:

Ignatius Roth, a colonist in the Jewish agricultural settlement of Hirsch in the Canadian North West (now southern Manitoba), wrote often to the BHI in Montreal. On Nov. 26, 1892, he apologized for the poor quality of the ink, which had been frozen, and described what it was like "to sit near a stove, hand and face warm, your back freezing, the wind blowing in from all sides."

In 1893, "Moses Schatsky, one of the colonists, received with the others a cow. A few days later he came to McDiarmid [the administrator] and said, I do not want the cow but give me the value of it in cash. McDiarmid...gave him $35 in cash, which the man immediately sent over to his friends in Russia."

On Jan. 25, 1894, treasurer Lazarus Cohen wrote the YHMBS that some colonists had exhausted their funds "and owing to the drought, hot winds and prairie fires that our farmers have suffered so much by, they are without means to procure seed for next season and in some cases without means of supporting their families till next harvest."

"Amongst the colonists," he continued, "are seven good farmers whose families are still in Russia and who have no means of bringing them out to Hirsch. They are: H. Furman, wife & 5 children; Sam Schatzky, wife & 6 children; I. Vineberg, wife & 10 children; N. Vineberg, wife & 3 children; N. Kornman, wife & 2 children; J. Shere, wife & 1 infant; M. Vestelnick, 6 children.

"This man's [Vestelnick's] wife died since coming out here and his children are without any means of support. He has two grown up sons with him. All these men are to be pitied, they are suffering very much and working at a great disadvantage; whilst their families are starving at home."

All 10 of the Jewish agricultural settlements in Western Canada faced extreme hardships, such as the calamity that befell the community in Wapella (Sask.) on Aug. 28, 1900. Beseeching the BHI for assistance, one writer reported: "A terrible cyclone swept through our district, and caused a terrible disaster; the hail swept everything before it. There is not even straw for our cattle....

"Two years ago, we were offered $500 as a gift for a Hebrew School, but we declined to the proposition, as we are not of beggarly nature, we thought that we could build a school of our own, and support it ourselves, but now as the wheel of progress took its turn backwards, we see that we are deceived in our imaginations, we cannot possibly get along without a Hebrew School...."

As the BHI was preparing to accept some 700 Jewish immigrants enroute to Montreal in the early years of the century, BHI president D. A. Ansell wrote to then prime minister Wilfrid Laurier to protest "the awful state they are now placed in by our Government inducing them to immigrate and on landing at Quebec being told that the laws of the Country forbid that they should go inland without having $25 per capita.

"These unfortunates have been misled by the agents of the Government and I think in the cause of humanity that they should not be turned away from our shores....The immigrants were not advised or prepared for such a severe monetary demand made without an hour's notice."

The records contain many names. For example, a 1908 list of young men from Galicia who received agricultural training includes the surnames Beutler, Buchhalter, Edelmann, Edelstein, Froehlich, Gaertner, Geltner, Kessler, Krampf, Rosenheck, Rosenstock, Schauben, Spindel and Wasser.

Are your ancestors mentioned somewhere in these pages?

Rabin was a true leader...

Guest Voices

By STEPHEN VICTOR

As we mark the anniversary of the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin, I am drawn to the speech he delivered to the Knesset on May 11, 1994. In this address, the late Israeli prime minister laid out the policy of his government and the details of the Declaration of Principles signed in Washington on Sept. 13, 1993.

It was the preamble of that landmark speech that sent chills through my spine. Here, in paying homage to Haim Bar-Lev and Aaron Yariv, two heroes who had recently died, Rabin used words that seemed to presage his own demise a mere 18 months later. In the words of Natan Alterman, Rabin described them as leaders who "carried their people on their shoulders."

Rabin added that they were of "the generation that struggled to create the state — and the generation that built it from its foundation. [They] served that state in its difficult hours — as soldiers, as commanders, as Knesset members, as ministers. They always served the public as its emissaries."

How poignant that a year and a half later, Rabin's words could be so powerfully and tragically applied to himself.

But Rabin was more than a soldier, more than a politician. He led his country into uncharted territory to make peace with a longstanding enemy and put an end to the wars and bloodshed that had plagued Israel since its founding. As a soldier, he paid the ultimate price for that peace.

Rabin embodied Israel's modern history. He was successively the underground fighter, soldier, architect of victory in the Six Day War, prime minister and Nobel Peace laureate. He was the nation's first native-born prime minister and its first to fall victim to assassination.

As a sabra and a soldier, Rabin understood as few of his contemporaries could the historical and cultural factors that contributed to the Arabs' longstanding animosity towards Israel.

But Rabin was also a keen observer of the regional and global strategic landscape. He early on recognized that the shift of power in the Arab world away from the rejectionists and towards the moderate pro-western camp was fundamental and not merely temporary. He viewed this as an opportunity for Israel to try to redefine its relationship with its major Arab neighbors. And so it was that Rabin was transformed from soldier to peacemaker.

Jewish mystical system explored

Books

By Bernard Baskin

The Essential Kabbalah, by Daniel C. Matt (Harper Collins, 25).

Opening the Inner Gates, by E. Hoffman (Random House, $21.95).

Kabbalah, the Jewish mystical system that developed in the 11th and 12th centuries, seems more popular today than ever. Persons who hardly know the letters of the Hebrew alphabet are eager to uncover the secrets of the Zohar, the difficult classical work of this esoteric tradition. Although not easy to absorb because of its symbolism, obscure allusions and multiple layers of meaning, Kabbalah still has the power to allure and attract.

The original tenets and teachings of the Kabbalists were recast and reinterpreted by Isaac Luria and his followers — mostly in the city of Tzfat — in the 16th century.

A prime doctrine of Kabbalah is that there are two aspects of Deity: God as He is in Himself (En Sof) and as He manifests Himself in nature through a process of 10 spheres or emanations (Sefirot).

These emanations descend through all forms of creation with men and women as final links in this great chain of being. When human beings are virtuous, they send beneficent impulses on high to promote harmony among the 10 spheres. When this happens, the divine grace flows freely to all. When, however, human beings are vicious and unworthy, they generate harmful influences that destroy the tranquillity of the 10 spheres and God's grace is withheld or diminished. In effect, men and women play a supreme role in God's world. They literally hold up the heavens.

A starting element in Kabbalah is the division of the sefirot into male and female genders and the acknowledgement of a female element in the Godhead known as the Shechinah. A source of controversy was the formula introduced by the Tzfat Kabbalists before the performance of a mitzvah in which they declared that the act to be performed was "for the sake of the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He and His Shechinah." Just what this means, even for those who recited it, remains uncertain and inexplicable.

The chassidic movement, starting in the 18th century, incorporated many mystical ideas and practices. Today all Jewish religious denominations agree that Kabbalah contains numerous insights that are still valid for the cultivation of spirituality.

The Essential Kabbalah is a slender but valuable anthology of kabbalistic thought from its foundation texts to teachings of our own time. The author's knowledgeable selections, rich and evocative translations, precise notes and helpful introduction to the subject make for lucid and stimulating reading.

Two typical selections from the book:

- "The theory of evolution accords with the secrets of Kabbalah better than any other theory. Evolution follows a path of ascent and thus provides the world with a basis for optimism. How can one despair, seeing that everything evolves and ascends? ... En sof generates, actualizes potential infinity." These are the surprising words of Rabbi Abraham Isaac Kook, former chief rabbi of Palestine.
- "God said to Abraham, 'Go forth.' This verse is addressed to every person. Search and discover the root of your soul, so that you can fulfil it and restore it to its source, its essence. The more you fulfil yourself, the closer you approach your authentic self."

Opening the Inner Gates contains 16 essays that explore new paths in Kabbalah and psychology. The contributors present both theoretical considerations and methods of Kabbalah applied in many directions: healing, the mind-body relationship, storytelling, women's spirituality and working with the elderly.

For the most part the essays are accessible to the interested reader and open up unexpected vistas of effective communication and therapy.

These volumes make available aspects of Judaism's "hidden wisdom" for those in search of old-new guidelines for their lives.

...a soldier, a prime minister

Of his most satisfying moment he had no doubt: the liberation and unification of Jerusalem after the Six Day War. But this was perhaps superseded by his final legacy in September 1993, when he led Israel to come to terms with the Palestinians "to live together on the same soil in the same and ... to open a new chapter ... of mutual recognition, of good neighborliness, of mutual respect, of understanding."

When he went to Washington, he said: "We have come to try to put an end to the hostilities, so that our children, our children's children will no longer experience the painful cost of war."

As for the leaders who "carried the people on their shoulders," Rabin was destined to outshine them all and become an illustrious star who served his people well and will always be remembered with warmth and admiration.

We may feel, as Rabin wrote, that "slowly our friends are departing the land of the living and we painfully take leave of them. A generation is disappearing, a generation which, in the glorious history of the state, will be enshrined as the 'builders' and protectors of the State of Israel."

In an interview in 1987, Rabin expressed a tinge of disappointment with his life for what he saw was a loss of national spirit, the failure of the creators of the state to pass on their sense of commitment. However, the Jewish people have always been inspired by fallen heroes like Rabin to reaffirm their faith in the future. Perhaps Rabin's greatest quality was his ability to learn and grow.

The finest homage we could pay to his memory is to learn from his example of courageous leadership, to continue to seek the common ground between neighbors and amongst klal Israel, and to grow from the tragedy of his untimely demise.

Rabin assassination marked with warning about rhetoric

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Jews everywhere must tone down their differences so as not to recreate the heated rhetoric that led to the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin, an assembly marking Rabin's first yahrzeit heard last week.

Keynote speaker Prof. Irwin Cotler told some 600 people at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue that Jews in Israel and the Diaspora must turn down the volume of debate and express differences in a more civil way.

Cotler, an international human rights expert, said several disturbing trends continue, despite Rabin's murder. One is Israel's "politics of exclusion," in which the Likud touts itself as "the national camp, implying that anyone not part of it is somehow less authentically Jewish and Zionist, and a traitor." Labor, meantime, calls itself the "peace camp," implying that anyone not on its side is anti-peace.

The labelling "is wrong and dangerous," while "silent acquiesence" to it is "no less wrong and dangerous," Cotler said.

The "existential nature" of politics in Israel has led to each political camp viewing the other as hastening the country's demise, he said. "Each side can make arguments to substantiate their claim, but demonizing each other is not only dangerous, it's lethal."

The "politics of hate" have resulted in references to the religious as "ayatollahs." On the flip side, early calls for Rabin's death came from the Orthodox rabbinate in North America, Cotler said.

The "politicization and falsification" of Halachah following Rabin's death have also contributed to the discord. Rabin's assassin, Yigal Amir, invoked Jewish law to justify his action, claiming, as others did, that the Talmud calls for the killing of a rodef (pursuer or would-be murderer).

"Amir was listening and believed he had the halachic mandate to kill a rodef."

It's not enough to disclaim responsibility, Cotler said, "We have to clear the air of the poisonous atmosphere." Words "can incite and kill."

Rabin touched so many people "because he embodied the contradictions in every Jew, our hopes and fears."

Greetings were brought by Israeli consul general Jehudi Kinar, who said "we have to get used to" the sight of Benjamin Netanyahu and Yasser Arafat shaking hands.

A musical tribute to Rabin was provided by Israel David and Yitzhak Argaman, and Cantor Efraim Sapir chanted K'El Maleh Rachamim. The evening was sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, B'nai Brith Canada and the Canadian Zionist Federation.

Controversial columnist invited to Reform event

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Even as the Reform party attempts to chart a middle course in Canadian politics, it continues to attract members of the radical right, sometimes with the active recruitment of its own MPs.

B.C. Reform MP Ted White recently sponsored a panel discussion in North Vancouver to discuss the issue of Quebec. Included in the program was columnist Doug Collins, who has questioned the Holocaust.

Meanwhile, the white supremacist Heritage Front has included an Internet hyperlink on its home page to connect it the Reform party's Web site. And in yet another development, Reform MP Herb Grubel is being blamed for helping create a welcoming atmosphere for a U.S.-based militia group that has created a presence in Smithers, B.C.

Canadian Jewish Congress has written to Reform leader Preston Manning to complain about the public program in which Collins participated as a speaker.

'It is absolutely offensive'

Collins was one of two reporters who were invited to query Bloc Quebecois MP Pierre de Savoye about the propects of Quebec separation. In addition to White, two other Reform MPs, Grubel and Paul Forseth, also attended the forum.

In a letter to Manning five days before the scheduled program, Congress Pacific chair Michael Elterman expressed "grave concerns that the Reform MP from North Vancouver is organizing a public meeting which will include Doug Collins, who has repeatedly published articles questioning the Holocaust."

Elterman pointed out that Manning had told a Congress national delegation earlier in the year that he wished to be alerted when Reform members "are involved with activities that may be construed as negative and extremist to Jewish and other community groups."

Following the program, Congress wrote to White as well, requesting his explanation for inviting Collins. In that letter, Elterman pointed out that Congress "has filed a complaint with the B.C. Human Rights Council in which Congress alleges that the North Shore News published an article by Collins which discriminates against Jewish persons and is likely to expose those persons to hatred and contempt on the basis of their race, religion and ancestry ..."

Bernie Farber, national director of community relations for Congress, said about 400 people attended the program about Quebec. "I think it is absolutely offensive" that Collins was asked to participate, he said. "There ought not be any legitimate political parties that make common cause" with extremists.

Commenting on the presence of a U.S.-based militia group in the northern part of the province, Elterman said "this type of activity in our own backyard should be of grave concern to all British Columbians. Private militia groups are illegal in Canada ... While not all militia members are racist, much of their rhetoric is filled with anti-Semitic and racist ideologies."

Elterman pointed out that in August, Grubel participated in a conference in Whistler, B.C., which included known U.S. militia supporters. In a letter to Grubel, Congress noted that the networking between Canadian and American far right activists represents a dangerous trend and suggested that Grubel's participation in the conference lent credibility to its radical agenda.

While the Reform party did not return CJN calls, party spokesperson Larry Welsh was quoted as denying any link to the Heritage Front, despite the computer connection.

Earlier this week, the Heritage Front altered its Web site to include the Reform party's denials, but it maintained the hyperlink to Reform's Web site.

Among other links are those to Resistance Records, National Alliance, Ernst Zundel and Stormfront.

UJA telethons propel campaign

UJA Federation's outreach to first time contributors is on a fast track, thanks to several successful telethons helping the campaign reach $27 million.

For the first time, campaigners made calls from the Promenade Shopping Centre on October 20 to raise awareness within York Region's huge Jewish community of nearly 50,000.

"It gave me the opportunity to do more than just give dollars," said telephone volunteer Evelyn Farber. "I had tons of fun."

"People are welcoming the opportunity to become more involved," observed campaigner Helen Silverstein.

"It's really great that we're gaining visibility in Thornhill," said Debby Feldman. "It's offering people a connection to the Jewish community."

On the same day, dozens of volunteers turned out for another new gifts telethon at the Lipa Green Building, where early pledges were coming in at the rate of one a minute.

"It's really gratifying to finally be reaching people who have never contributed before," said Agi Mandel, Vice-Chair of UJA Federation's Women's Campaign.

"There are people out there with fire and passion," explained New Gifts Co-chair Gary Grundman, "and all we've got to do is get to them."

"We can only go forward from here," said Dennis Bader, who is active in UJA Federation's South African Network, one of the many divisions that participated in the telethon.

Harvey Cooperberg, who helped train campaigners summed it up. "It's very exciting and rewarding getting new gifts."

The new gifts phase of UJA Federation Campaign '97 was officially launched two days ago, during an evening program featuring Israel affairs expert Shira Herzog as the guest speaker.

UJA Federation welcomes new contributors

Shira Biderman: feeling good about giving

Shira Biderman

When Shira Biderman was asked to become involved with UJA Federation, the recent ex-Montrealer wasted no time saying "yes." But as a new contributor, she had no idea just how much her volunteerism was going to change her view of the Jewish community.

"I said 'yes' right away," recalls the 24 year old insurance broker, after a colleague from work approached her less than a year ago.

"At the time, I didn't know much about UJA Federation but I knew that I wanted to give back to the community."

Her decision to contribute both time and money was affirmed at this year's Campaign launch when Biderman was touched by the UJA Federation's Keep the Fire Burning video. "I don't think there was a dry eye in the audience," she says. "I was absolutely blown away by the strong sense of community surrounding me."

After the launch, Biderman volunteered as a campaigner at UJA Federation's Super Sunday where she was warmed by the "receptive and generous people at the other end of the phone."

"The whole experience has made me more aware of my own community and more in tune with my Jewish heritage," says Biderman. "I only wish I could give more."

"UJA Federation gives people in need something to lean on."

16th Annual Holocaust Education Week

Holocaust author reveals humanity

The author whose life story inspired an Oscar-winning documentary is making a special trip to Toronto to share more of her war time experiences.

Gerda Klein will be opening the 16th Annual Holocaust Education Week, sponsored by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of UJA Federation. She has been on the lecture circuit since the HBO film One Survivor Remembers won the coveted award from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences last Spring.

But although Klein was "completely surprised" about the Oscar night win, publicity has been a part of her daily life since arriving in the U.S. from war torn Czechoslovakia in 1946.

"I started speaking publicly and writing about my experiences right away," says Klein. "I felt they had to be recorded."

What makes Klein's stories different from the similar accounts of thousands of other survivors, was that she yearned to tell them and they focused on the more humane and uplifting aspects of her horrific past.

"Silence conveys shame," Klein says. "I wanted to testify to the dignity I had witnessed throughout the ordeal in the way the Jews dealt with their circumstances."

Her unique perspective won her international recognition for the autobiography she published in 1957, All But My Life. Excerpts from the book which describes her liberation from a death march by American intelligence officer Kurt Klein, who later became her husband, appear in high school text books.

Klein, who is the sole survivor of her family, says the success of the documentary was "a humbling experience" that left her with "a tremendous responsibility to continue telling my story."

"The award belongs to all the people who showed tremendous courage in the face of unimaginable adversity."

Her husband, who still remembers first laying eyes on Gerda in an abandoned factory in the Czech countryside, says "it's very rewarding to see my wife bring her story to the people. It's the most important thing we can do."

Gerda and Kurt Klein will appear Thursday, November 7, 8:00 p.m., at the University of Toronto's Convocation Hall, 31 King's College Circle.

Community Partners

It's centre stage for UJA's A&E division

Richard Sadowski and Howard Lichtman are raising the curtain on UJA Federation's Arts & Entertainment Division.

Howard Lichtman

Sadowski, who co-chairs the division with Lichtman, is partner in Movie Seller/Entertainment Depot. He comes from a long line of community volunteers. In fact, it was his cousin Wendy Eisen, a past UJA Campaign Chair and his good friend Scott Staiman, former co-chair of UJA Federation's Business Cabinet, who got Sadowski involved three years ago.

"I've always been community minded," explains Sadowski, whose volunteerism includes working with Jewish teens and Mount Sinai Hospital.

After attending the 1994 UJA Federation Campaign Launch, Sadowski says he was "compelled to do more for the community." Beginning as a Super Sunday campaigner, he eventually co-chaired last year's Countdown '96.

But it was his involvement with UJA Federation when Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated that most affected Sadowski. "The spirit of community at that emotional time filled my heart."

Sadowski and co-chair Howard Lichtman have helped to restructure the division, create a newsletter and organize a successful program on "the business of entertainment."

Lichtman, who is the Executive Vice-President of Marketing and Communications for Cineplex Odeon, has been in charge of the A&E division for the past three years.

Richard Sadowski

Lichtman grew up in Montreal where he spent his youth working with various Jewish organizations including B'nai Brith and Young Judea.

After having put his volunteer career on the back burner while completing his MBA, Lichtman began working for UJA Federation as a campaigner and underwent the Leadership Development Program.

"I wanted to get back into the loop," explains Lichtman. "I felt I had been lucky and the time had come to give something back."

Lichtman sees a lot of opportunity for growth within the A&E division. The challenge, he says, is creating a sense of community among a very diverse group. "Artists and reporters don't see themselves as being in the same business," explains Lichtman. "But what they share in common is Jewish identity."

Lichtman is proud of the strides the division has made. "We've already had success in the area of new gifts and it's great to know we're reaching those we've never reached before."

I BELIEVE

Educational institutions. Homes for the elderly. Cultural and recreational centres. Healthcare organizations. Houses of worship.

These are the pillars of Toronto's Jewish community. They reflect our ideals. They embody our priorities. Most important, they translate our individual and collective values into practice.

The quality of our lives as Jews and the success of our community depend on the strength of our institutions. But changing needs and growing demands are challenging the capacity of our institutions to respond.

I believe that UJA Federation is the most efficient means of ensuring that what we value — as a Jewish community — is translated into effective action through our institutions. Now. And always.

Larry Tanenbaum

By funding our community's institutions, UJA Federation enriches Jewish life in Toronto. It provides help and hope to those in need. It ensures access to a Jewish education and fosters Jewish culture. It enables us to speak out on the critical issues that affect Jews here and abroad. It builds living bridges with Israel.

But for all we have, demand is not being met. The resources we need can only come from one place: Our community. Each and every one of us.

FOR OUR COMMUNITY. FOR ISRAEL.
FOR OUR CHILDREN. FOREVER.

Bazaar draws bargain hunters

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The 72nd Hadassah-WIZO Bazaar brought bargain hunters out in droves.

An estimated 20,000 people — some lined up as early as 4 a.m. — attended the bazaar held recently at the Automotive Building at Exhibition Place.

Bazaar chair Mindy Kirsh, who had spent a year planning for the big day, said she was pleased with the turnout.

The mood was festive as shoppers staked out bargains and haggled over prices, but there was a sour note to the day — someone had passed off phoney $20 bills.

Despite this setback, it was business as usual at the bazaar, with Hadassah members hawking everything from vinyl flooring and carpet remnants to fun fur coats and bridal wear. Every-day household items like soaps, shampoos and packaged and fresh foods were also available at fire-sale prices.

Shoppers sifted through mounds and racks of second-hand clothing, books and collectibles. And for t'shatshke lovers, there was an endless array of old and new merchandise that included porcelain picture frames, figurines, key-chains and decorative boxes,

With something for everybody, few people left empty-handed or hungry. The food-laden second level of the building was a nasher's paradise with Hadassah chapters dishing out home-made soups, salads, fresh sandwiches and gourmet cakes and pastries.

One of the oldest Hadassah members helping out at the Bazaar was Clara Smith of the Olga Shayne chapter, a Hadassah member since 1928. Bazaar organizers lauded Smith's commitment, noting that despite a hospitalization for a hip injury last year, she came to help out at the bazaar — she hasn't missed one in 45 years — shortly after being discharged from the hospital.

Lillian Levy, another member of Olga Shayne — she joined Hadassah in 1935 — has seen 62 bazaars. The only thing that's changed over the years is that there are "a lot more schmattes," she said. "I love the bazaar. I like the way everyone participates. It's the one time when all the women get together and participate as a team."

The volunteers spanned several generations and one of the busiest was 9-year-old Emily Weizel who was helping out Tzedakah chapter, of which her mother is a member.

Emily's aunt, Linda Friedlich, recalled coming to the bazaar as a child. "It was very exciting. I loved finding the bargains."

After modelling bridal hats and veils, Karen Goldberg and Carla Forrin of the Adena-Hanesse chapter said they looked forward to overseeing the clean-up of the building, a responsibility they've taken on together for the last six years.

The bazaar lasts a few months longer for these two women. They collect all broken toys left over, repair and wash them and bring them to the pediatric ward at Doctor's Hospital.

Jewish people must stay united conference told

By SIDURA LUDWIG
Special to the CJN

TORONTO – Regardless of the diversity which exists in the Jewish community, its future lies in the coming together of its people, panelists agreed at a recent conference on Creating the Jewish Future.

"Jewish emunah [faith] does not come out of lectures, but out of being together," said Prof. Susan Handelman of the University of Maryland, one of three speakers at a panel on Faith and Religion in a "Secular" Age.

Handelman said the Jewish people are not living in a secular age, but in a post-secular age; that in this age, the Jewish people want to believe, but simply do not know how.

"We've become skeptical of skepticism," she said, acknowledging that many Jews feel confused about their identity.

"G-d is still there in the void," she said, "because without the divine light, the void could not exist."

Rabbi Gunther Plaut of the Holy Blossom Temple in Toronto said that the skepticism in the Jewish community has led to a change from belief in G-d to belief in science.

"Western society has adopted a new emunah," he said. "It has replaced the old G-d with a new one of science."

"What 'believe in G-d' means is unclear," he added. "Nowhere are we commanded to believe."

Because of this, he suggested, G-d has become a concept the Jewish people turn to only in crisis.

Rabbi Plaut said there has also been a change in the Jewish community's priority.

"A traditional Jewish environment began with community and then the individual. The western society begins with the individual and then the community," he said.

Regardless of the community's change in focus, however, Rabbi Plaut maintained that "Jewish continuity without faith is limited."

The third panelist, Prof. Robert Eisen of George Washington University in Washington, D.C., said the growing interest in Jewish spirituality has sparked a revival of the study of Kabbalah. While the older Jewish generation is often perplexed by Kabbalah, Eisen said young Jews and often the unaffiliated are attracted to it.

"Kabbalah is an attempt to have a universal, direct intimate relationship with the Divine," he said.

"Jewish baby boomers are seeking religious spiritualism outside of the synagogue," Eisen suggested.

It is the supernatural element of Kabbalah that attracts young Jews, he believes. "The mythical description of G-d makes Him more acceptable."

A later panel on Educating for the Future featured two panelists, professors Michael Rosenak of the Hebrew University and Alvin Schiff of Yeshiva University, who agreed that it is important to encourage Jewish practice through education.

Rosenak said Jewish education should focus on the two aspects of the Jewish faith – language and literature. He explained that language refers to the terms associated with Judaism and literature to the Jewish use and understanding of those terms.

"It is not always possible for [the Jewish people] to come to an agreement as to what constitutes language," he said.

But, he said, in teaching children this language, it is still important that they understand and become familiar with the observances or the use of this language.

Language, literature said key aspects of Jewish faith

Speaking on effective Jewish education, Schiff said, "The Mishnah says that there are two kinds of future, immediate and distant. The success of any project depends on its short-term and long-term planning."

Schiff said funding for education should go first to the affiliated and marginally affiliated Jews, to ensure that neither groups strays towards the unaffiliated. Priorities should also be given to those programs that best support Jewish continuity.

The future of Jewish education, he said, depends on five things: family; cognitive and affective domains; Hebraic teaching and learning; the transmission of universal and paternalistic Jewish values; and technical methods of instruction.

At the same time, Schiff said that adequate Jewish education can provide a sense of belonging in the Jewish community.

"Students who graduated from a Jewish high school show more Jewish adult activity than those who just graduated from a Jewish elementary school.

"Hebrew may be the channel for Jewish spirituality," he said.

The two-day conference at York University was sponsored by the university's Centre of Jewish Studies.

Holocaust survivor hoping to learn fate of lost father

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

Alex Barmherzig

David Barmherzig

TORONTO — A Toronto Holocaust survivor and former Israeli paratrooper is hoping against hope that after 53 years, he may find out what happened to his father.

The last time Alex Barmherzig saw his father, David, then 41 and a native of Wolbrom, Poland, was when his father escaped from a transport carrying Jews to Auschwitz in August 1943.

"The last words he said to me were, 'Look after your mother,' " Barmherzig said in an interview.

Barmherzig himself, now 70, was on the same transport and survived to be liberated in 1945.

But his mother, two sisters, ages 13 and 14, and twin brothers, age 11, died at Auschwitz.

In all the years since, despite his having made countless inquiries, Barmherzig has had no word about his father, who may have joined the underground. His father would be 94 if still alive.

But a photograph taken at Auschwitz, possibly in the museum there, has led him to renew his quest. It shows boxes containing the personal effects of Auschwitz prisoners. One of them is clearly marked with his father's name, David Barmherzig.

The picture appears in Dachau, Book Two by Toronto survivor and writer Irving Eisner.

"Mr. Eisner told me that the picture may have been taken by one of the participants in the March of the Living in Poland, in which Eisner took part. I am appealing to anyone who took the picture or who saw the box with my father's effects to get in touch with me. I have already called about 25 people who were on the march and who took pictures — without success," he says.

There are about seven boxes of effects in the picture and in addition to the name David Barmherzig, which appears clearly, there is the number 290.

Alex Barmherzig made his way to Israel in 1948 and fought as a paratrooper with the Israeli army. He took part in three wars there, and in Canada, became a volunteer paratroop instructor with the Canadian army.

Although he has never visited Poland since the Holocaust (he came to Toronto in 1964), he said he would eagerly go back to Auschwitz to check on the belongings in the box if he can confirm that indeed the photo was taken at the museum. His son, Morris, a lawyer, would accompany him.

Barmherzig can be reached at 416-225-9962.

Nursing research chair launched by hospital, U of T

TORONTO — Mount Sinai Hospital and the University of Toronto (U of T) recently announced the creation of the $2-million Heather M. Reisman Chair in Perinatal Nursing Research, the first nursing research chair ever established in Canada.

The endowed chair will provide the hospital and U of T's Faculty of Nursing with a permanent senior researcher and a new junior faculty member in perinatal nursing, to study care throughout the childbearing period. It will also ensure continued funding for a number of research projects already underway.

Dr. Ellen Hodnett has been named the first chair holder. Hodnett is director of the Perinatal Nursing Research Unit at Mount Sinai Hospital and a professor in the U of T's Faculty of Nursing. Her current research is international in scope and focuses on the impact of nursing care on women before, during and after childbirth.

"This chair is extremely significant because it will ensure that we can maintain a strong research program in perinatal nursing," said Dr. Dorothy Pringle, dean of Nursing at U of T. "It will also help raise awareness of the importance of nursing research in Canada."

The chair is named for Reisman, president of now! industries inc., and a member of the executive committee of Mount Sinai Hospital. Reisman provided the lead gift and spearheaded the effort to raise $1 million to fund the chair, and U of T matched the gift.

"Nursing plays a vital role in the health care system. It's time to begin boosting and investing in this critical profession," said Reisman. "I am proud to help support nursing and honored to have my name associated with the chair."

Clinton may pressure Israel if re-elected: journalist

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — If Bill Clinton is re-elected president of the United States it will mean more pressure on the Israeli government to achieve some kind of peace with the Palestinians, a vetern CBC TV correspondent predicted recently.

Clinton's position vis-a-vis Israel is shown by his "evasive answers" on whether he would send U.S. troops to police a peace in the Middle East, Joe Schlesinger told a forum sponsored by the UJA Federation Marketing Division at Leah Posluns Theatre.

All three panelists, Allan Gotlieb, former Canadian ambassador to Washington; his wife, Sondra Gotlieb; and Schlesinger agreed that Clinton will beat Republican Bob Dole in the election.

The panelists and moderator, Global TV news anchor Peter Kent, were presented with colorful T-shirts bearing the slogan "Luv Ur Roots" promoting the current UJA campaign.

The strength of the fundamentalist Muslim movement in the world and the supply of arms it receives in a roundabout way from the United States are important in assessing what will happen if Clinton is re-elected, Schlesinger said.

Joe Schlesinger

He also predicted that the Helms-Burton bill penalizing Canadians who do business with Cuba will go on the "back burner" if the Democrats win power.

If Democrats win the presidency and the control of Congress, as is likely, it will result in a more protectionist U.S. policy, Allan Gotlieb said.

The two major U.S. parties have moved so close together on policy that a Republican will be next president of the U.S. whether his name is Clinton or Dole, Gotlieb said.

"The election is a big yawn, the voters are bored, integrity, character and foreign policy are off the radar screen. This is the election of the 'big shrug.' Clinton, well ahead in the polls, is a flawed man for flawed times."

Gotlieb said Clinton was "remarkably amorphous" and a "genius at shifting positions.

"He is running as Ronald Reagan," he added.

Sondra Gotlieb said Clinton would never have been elected without the support of his wife, Hillary, and noted that in this election she is being kept in the background because she is now considered a political liability.

She said a public debate by the wives of Clinton and Dole would be as "irrelevant" as are the debates by the candidates themselves.

Elizabeth Dole is a better campaigner than her husband, "but her husband doesn't always listen," Sondra Gotlieb said.

UJA marketing chair Howard Brown and forum co-chairs Heather Scott and Penny East also took part.

POLITICAL THOUGHT

Olivier Bertrand, 21, of Hull, Quebec had the opportunity to study at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem this past summer. Bertrand has a BA in political science from the University of Ottawa and is working on his MA thesis in political thought, focusing on the tension between individual freedom and the goals of the collective.

U.S. summit taught Arafat a lesson: Arens

By ADAM KORBIN
Special to The CJN

VANCOUVER — Yasser Arafat learned a diplomatic lesson in Washington recently when he faced Israel Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at the summit called by U.S. President Bill Clinton, according to former Israel ambassador to the United States, Moshe Arens.

"It was good for Arafat to leave empty handed and that Netanyahu didn't make any concessions. Otherwise it would have sent a message to Palestinians that violence is their negotiating tool," Arens said.

Arens was at Vancouver's Temple Sholom to address a Combined Jewish Appeal fundraiser.

Arens said Arafat has to make the transition from a leader of a terrorist army to a leader of civilians. "Personally, I am not concerned that he was disappointed with the results of the summit, because he learned, perhaps once and for all, that violence doesn't pay off."

Arens, who served for nearly 10 years as foreign affairs and defence minister in the Likud governments of Menachem Begin and Yitzhak Shamir, told his audience of about 250 they should take into consideration two major factors in assessing Netanyahu's diplomatic approach. First, 90 percent of Israeli Arabs voted for Shimon Peres and about 56 percent of Israeli Jews voted for Netanyahu. In addition, the Oslo peace accord, he said, was passed by the Knesset by a very narrow margin.

"If you understand these two factors then you can see there is no reason for frustration by either the Palestinians or the Israelis," Arens said. "As a nation constantly seeking international support, Israel cannot renege on the Oslo accord. But don't expect the Netanyahu government to pursue diplomatic obligations it would have preferred not to have made in the first place," Arens said.

Moshe Arens

The speaker, who was involved in the negotiations when the Sinai was given back to Egypt, claimed that if Peres and the Labor party had won the last election, Peres would have moved quickly to trade the Golan Heights for a peace treaty with Syria.

"If such a deal had been made before the elections," he added, "Netanyahu would not have been able to back out of it."

Arens said he was convinced Israelis knew that this was the direction Peres was headed, and by voting Likud, they voted against giving up the Golan.

But Arens praised the former Labor government for not pulling out of Hebron, since there was no guarantee that the Jewish population there would be protected by the Palestinian police force.

"The only thing that was certain was that the PLO would likely have destroyed the Hebron Jews in 24 hours. Can we expect the Palestinians will ever protect the Jews in Hebron?" he asked.

The answer lies with Yasser Arafat, who must find a way of policing his own population, while still protecting the Jews in Hebron.

"This is as important to the Palestinians as it is to Israelis," Arens said. "This will be Arafat's greatest challenge in his transition from terrorist to politician."

Netanyahu panned as PM by Middle East analyst

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Despite Benjamin Natanyahu's "brilliance" and "meteoric rise," he's been a dud so far as prime minister, a Middle East analyst suggested here recently.

"I really don't know what to make of him," Daniel Pipes, editor of the Middle East Quarterly, told a recent "insider briefing" of the Canadian Institute for Jewish Research (CIJR).

"He's an unknown figure in many ways, in some ways competent, in some ways incompetent."

In terms of the peace process, Pipes said one of the main problems has been Likud's failure to present an overall "strategic vision."

Netanyahu, for example, backed off his opposition to Oslo and to dealing with the PLO, but has, since his election, been "grudging," "half-hearted," and "inconsistent" about it.

Instead, advised Pipes, who is also director of the Philadelphia-based Middle East Forum, Netanyahu should accept Oslo — including withdrawing from Hebron — while demanding equal "full compliance" with the accord and "reciprocity" by the Palestinians.

Asked by CIJR director Frederick Krantz whether Netanyahu's delaying tactics might in itself be a deliberate "strategy," Pipes replied, "Delay is more effective on the military battlefield, not the diplomatic one."

Pipes predicted that the Likud government, assuming U.S. President Bill Clinton is returned to office next month, will face a "far more difficult situation" because the United States will really begin to pile on the pressure.

Clinton will be in his second term and there is an "emerging alignment" among U.S. liberals and conservatives to exert pressure on Israel, Pipes said.

Should no progress be made on the ground, he predicted, "there will be a fairly serious change in [U.S.-Israeli] relations."

Earlier, Pipes, who is also an expert on Syria and Islamic fundamentalism and the author of several books, spoke on Syria.

He told CIJR members that President Hafez al-Assad's willingness to talk peace with Israel had more to do with ensuring his own survival and opening Syria up to more positive contact with the West, than it did with actually attaining peace.

"It brought him prestige and attention," Pipes said, "as well as access to European armaments and foreign investment."

Achieving an actual peace with Israel, maintained Pipes, would threaten the minority Alawi group of which Assad is a member.

Assad "is too fearful of what it means to go ahead [with peace]," Pipes said. "He believes the only way for the Alawis to survive is to stay in power."

However, Pipes also noted that Syria, without a peace treaty, remains an "existential threat to Israel."

"The chances for peace are quite slender as long as the Alawis are in power," he said.

That evening, Pipes delivered a public lecture on Islamic fundamentalism at the the Tifereth Beth David Jerusalem Synagogue.

Pipes' most recent book, just published, is titled, The Hidden Hand: Middle East Fears of Conspiracy.

Philanthropist leaves $3 million to Manitoba Jewish charity

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG – The Jewish Foundation of Manitoba has received the largest individual gift in its 32-year history.

The late Mark Danzker's $3-million bequest is the second largest ever given to a public foundation in Manitoba. With the already existing Mark and Dorothy Danzker Perpetual Trust Fund of $550,000, the Danzkers have left the foundation $3.55 million, pushing the organization's capital assets past the $20 million mark.

Mark Danzker died in February 1995, just before his 93rd birthday. He was successful both as a businessman and as a politician. For 10 years in the 1960s, he served on Winnipeg City Council retiring undefeated. He also served on numerous community boards. In the Jewish community, he was president of the YMHA Jewish Community Centre and the Mid-West region of the Canadian Zionist Organization. He was an early supporter of the Jewish Foundation, serving as president in 1972 and 1973.

An all-round athlete in his youth, he particularly loved baseball and was instrumental in bringing the first Winnipeg Goldeyes minor league baseball team to Winnipeg in 1954.

In gratitude to the Sharon Home, where he lived his last eight years (his wife, Dorothy died in 1988), he has designated 20 percent of the interest earned annually on his bequest to the foundation to be directed to the Winnipeg Jewish seniors home. Some funding will also go toward construction of a baseball diamond – to be named after Danzker – at the Asper Jewish Community Campus.

Canada-Israel free trade debated in Ottawa

The following are excerpts from the debate in the House of Commons on Bill C-61, which will implement the Canada-Israel Free Trade Agreement. The bill will put most aspects of the deal into force as of Jan. 1, 1997. Excluded from the agreement will be egg and dairy products and poultry.

The Hon. Art Eggleton, Minister for International Trade: This historic agreement is both significant and symbolic. Significant because it marks the first free trade agreement Canada has signed with a partner outside this hemisphere, and symbolic because it stands as further evidence of Canada's commitment to freer trade around the world.

For the first time we will have direct access to the Israeli market without having to funnel our trade through the United States or any other country.

While recent developments in the Middle East have been a source of concern to all of us, they should not blind us to the progress to date, nor discourage us from the long term goals. We should be encouraged by the pledges recently made by both Chairman Arafat and Prime Minister Netanyahu to renounce violence and continue negotiations toward peace.

We must recognize that the peace process has already brought concrete benefits to Israel. A large number of capital projects in the areas of transportation, energy and communications are being considered by Israel and her neighbors, a development which would have been unthinkable just a few years ago.

This agreement is also important to Canada because of the nature of the Israeli economy. With a thriving private sector, an educated workforce, modern banking systems, an important stock exchange and an excellent communications system, Israel is one of the fastest growing economies in that region.

The new Israeli government's far-reaching economic program is aimed at lowering taxes, reducing government spending, cutting red tape and reforming restrictive labor practices.

Complementing Israel's economic reforms are its growing political relations. At the end of 1995, Israel had re-established relations with more than 40 countries that had broken ties in the 1960s and 1970s.

Trade between our two countries is modest, but it is growing. Two-way trade last year is up 37 percent to stand at $450 million. Our exports stood at $216 million in 1995, up 49 percent from the previous year. I am confident that with the implementation of this agreement those figures will grow dramatically.

Art Eggleton

Many Canadian companies, some well-known, such as Bombardier and Newbridge, and some not so well known, such as Claridge Israel, Global Upholstery, Reikh International, Signatel and Telespace, are on the ground, already exploring new partnerships and bidding on new infrastructure projects. These firms are spearheading an increase in exports and imports between our countries. They are boosting investment and encouraging innovation through research and development and joint ventures. All of their efforts and those of others will be made much easier by the agreement we are considering here today.

Deal also being offered to Palestinian Authority

This agreement, as I have pointed out, is being offered to the Palestinian Authority to cover the people in the Gaza and West Bank. The sooner we put that into effect for them, the sooner job opportunities will help flow through and improve their economy. That kind of economic development is needed to help bring about stability in the area.

Benoit Sauvageau (Bloc Quebecois, Terrebonne): When [Eggleton] said that free trade with Israel would solve practically every problem, would create lots of jobs, and so on, he forgot to mention three relatively important aspects. First of all, political or economic stability did not seem to be a prerequisite for Canada to sign a free trade agreement with Israel. So it is possible to trade and to talk about job creation with a country that does not enjoy complete political and economic stability.

We just have to watch television or read the international section in the newspapers to see that if it is so good for Canada to sign a free trade deal with Israel in terms of job creation, it does not necessarily mean that political stability makes Quebec's economy unhealthy. If we apply what the minister said to the situation in Quebec, that statement is true.

If the government is so happy to sign a free trade deal with Israel, a country that does $450 million a year in trade with Canada... I think we can assume that it would be all the more happy to sign such a deal with a country that does $250 billion in trade with Canada...

In addition, we call on the Liberal government to urge the Israeli Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, to re-establish and maintain peace with the Palestinian people, so as to stabilize the situation in the Middle East.

We suggest to the Canadian government that it not exclude the Palestinians from trade resulting from this agreement. Discussions with Palestinian representatives are therefore necessary in order to look at the possibility of extending the agreement to this territory.

The Bloc Quebecois will vote in favor of Bill C-61, and enthusiastically welcomes the signing of a Canada-Israel free trade agreement. We hope that this agreement will increase trade with Israel, and subsequently with all the other countries in the world, as the minister said.

Although the Bloc Quebecois encourages increased trade between Canada and the State of Israel, because we believe that it can contribute to the peace processs and to stability in the region, we call on the Canadian government to ensure that the State of Israel respects fundamental Canadian democratic values and human rights.

Charlie Penson (Reform — Peace River, Alta.): Let me be clear that we are not opposed to this bill. We believe that each step made in the direction of trade liberalization is a good one. I am only surprised at the low-key, behind closed doors way in which the deal was struck. There should have been more opportunity for input from industry groups.

Fry defends commitment to multiculturalism

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — The federal government is committed to a multiculturalism policy "as a core component of Canadian identity," said Hedy Fry, federal secretary of state for multiculturalism, in a statement to The CJN.

Fry was responding to an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail which quoted a recent report as saying that the federal government "has done a rotten job of selling multiculturalism to Canadians."

The Brighton report referred to in the article is only one part of a comprehensive review of all multicultural programs, said Fry. An unauthorized draft copy of that document was obtained by a news organization, which reported only select portions, she said.

Program review is part of a government-wide effort of all federal departments to ensure that programs are effective, efficient and results orientated, she added.

"We need to ensure that our programs keep pace with changes and meet the needs of a diverse society. The review process is in its final stages and we will announce our decision in the near future."

Fry, a Vancouver MP, said that while the Brighton report has provided valuable information, "it does not give us the full picture, nor is it the only reference for review. We have undertaken public surveys, research and analysis, as well as community consultation," she added.

Fry said that while she does not agree with all the recommendations of the report, "it clearly supports the mandate of multicultural programs."

She said funding should be based on the ability to meet program objectives. "This kind of accountability makes common sense and does not preclude ethnocultural organizations from receiving funding.

"We value greatly the successful partnerships we have built with organizations, public institutions and the private sector and want to continue to work with them to build a society built on respect, participation and social justice — the mandate of the multicultural programs," she said.

In her statement to The CJN, Fry said she wishes the media and public would read the entire report before making a judgment, and is therefore releasing the full report, on request, "to ensure both the media and public have a clear understanding of its findings."

For a copy of The Strategic Evaluation of Multicultural Programs, contact the communications department of the ministry at 819-997-0797. It is also available on the Internet at [http//www.pch.gc.ca] under News Releases.

BRANKSOME HALL WELCOMES MIDDLE DIVISION

The hub of Branksome Hall's Middle Division is Buccleuch House, a remodelled 100-year old building with a history of its own. Buccleuch has classrooms, locker rooms, a student lounge, a guidance office and a teacher work area where Middle Division faculty work together to plan and organize the Grade 7, 8 and 9 academic courses. Buccleuch, while an integral part of the bigger school, "is an intimate building that the girls can retreat to for comfort and security as they are making that transition to a new school and a more independent environment," says Mrs. Judy MacLellan, Co-ordinator of the Middle Division.

According to Mrs. MacLellan the strength of the Middle Division program is the curriculum continuum it provides from Grades 7 all the way through Graduating Year. "Programs in all departments from Grade 7 up are co-ordinated, which enables us to combine course content with the teaching of skills such as research technology, essay writing and study strategies," she says.

The Middle Division program focusses on the development of the whole child. There are two homeroom teachers for each group of 20-22 students which provides for two smaller advisor groups of 10 girls, ensuring individual attention to each student.

Middle Division academics prepare the students for a four year high school program. A great deal of thought, however, has also gone into planning the "hidden curriculum" which attends to the emotional, social and personal development of the individual. Grade 7 students begin a portfolio of "Skills for Success" to help them document their personal strengths and talents. They will add to these portfolios as they move through the Division.

In addition the Middle School program provides leadership opportunities to Grade 8 and 9 students in the areas of clans, extra-curricular activities, student life and student council. Students do not have to wait until they are seniors to have a voice in the school.

The Middle Division's first year was a great success as the school engaged, challenged and motivated each student. In fact, last year many of these students celebrated outstanding achievements participating in the Junior High Provincial Tournament for Debating, placing second in the Ontario Provincial Mathematics Olympics and winning first place in the vocal class at the Kiwanis Music Festival.

CJC-P calls for integrated hate crime response

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — The British Columbia Jewish community would like to see a province-wide, integrated hate crime response network that would include a liaison to the Crown, a human rights council and hate-crime fighting organizations, said Dr. Michael Elterman, chair of the Canadian Jewish Congress, Pacific region (CJC-P), at a recent symposium.

Sponsors of the symposium held at the Plaza 500 Hotel here included the B.C. Human Rights Coalition, Canadian Anti-Racism Education and Research Society, CJC-P, Vancouver Association of Chinese Canadians. It was supported by the community liaison branch of the Ministry Responsible for Multiculturalsm and Immigration of British Columbia and was attended by B.C. Attorney General Ujaal Dosanjh, who spoke briefly.

Elterman said the province needs a central repository to collect and analyse hate crime so as to measure and monitor the nature and extent of the problem. Such data would be available to law enforcement and government agencies.

Elterman told the attorney general he should develop guidelines for compiling data and require all law enforcement agencies to report such offences on a regular basis.

"The anti-hate crime team to be formed by the government would file an annual report to the legislature," he said.

"The Jewish community has been the victim of hatred for so many hundreds of years," said Elterman, "that while we still react with anger and fear, hate doesn't surprise us."

He said the community expects Congress to act "and we generally try to deal with each situation with the resources we have."

Like other target groups, "we struggle with the dilemma of giving hate groups a platform by drawing attention to them, or saying 'to hell with it, go after them.' We tend to be less and less concerned about the former consideration."

The Congress response to hate groups can broadly be divided into prevention activities and reaction activities, said Elterman. "A lot of reaction activities are not made public because they involve liaison and working with law enforcement and government."

Zena Simces Katz, vice-chair of CJC-P and community relations chair, called for coordinated response to hatemongers.

"We need to work together," she said. "The fact that a number of diverse groups have come together today illustrates that we are able to work together. In order to work together effectively, we need a structure and process. The province's hate crime team provides an opportunity to bring government and community together, including police, Crown victim services, human rights groups and a wide range of diverse community groups."

Simces Katz called for a provincial policy that would outline the role and responsibilities of each key player in responding to hate crimes. The policy must have teeth in it — there must be mechanisms in place to ensure policy is implemented, she said.

All groups affected by hate need to let go of their own biases and work together to respond to hate crime and develop a provincial policy, she said. "We need to work independently but also collectively on common issues."

Hamilton businessman to be honored by Bonds-BB

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — Local businessman Sheldon Frank has been named honoree of this year's annual combined Hamilton State of Israel Bonds-B'nai Brith, Hamilton breakfast on Nov. 10 at 9:30 a.m. at Temple Anshe Sholom.

Frank was born and educated in Hamilton and at the University of Akron, Ohio. He joined the family business and is now president of A.J. Frank & Son Inc. Frank Pipe Company and a partner in Gibraltar Processing.

He is a former president of Hamilton Jewish National Fund (JNF), a member of the JNF board of directors, and has served as JNF Negev Dinner foundation chair.

Frank and his wife Wendy have two sons, Abby, now a member of the family business, and Joel, a student at Colorado Mountain College.

Guest speaker at the breakfast will be John Loftus, author of The Secret War Against the Jews, The Belarus Secret and co-author of Unholy Trinity, a history of how the Vatican helped Nazi smuggling networks to penetrate western intelligence. Loftus is a former prosecutor with the U.S. Justice Department's Nazi War Crimes Unit, from which he resigned in protest when he discovered that the very Nazi war criminals he had been assigned to prosecute were working for NATO intelligence.

Chair of Hamilton State of Israel Bonds is Allen Rams; Larry Szpirglas will serve as breakfast chair.

שישאר בינינו

גידי קורן

שמעון פרס, האמילטון אונטריו:

גילוי ומימוש עצמי אין פירושם האדרת הדימוי החברתי של האדם או קבלת חיזוקים מאחרים, אלא דווקא השלת הקליפות שחוסמות את הדרך למימוש האני האמיתי (True Self) . אבות אבותינו הקדמונים בחנו את החיים על פי הגישה שפנימיות האדם מדריכה אותו ונשקפת בחיצוניותו. בימינו נוקקנו לבטוי "אין תוכו כברו" שפירושו הפשוט הוא שחיצוניות האדם אינה משקפת את פנימיותו... להזהירנו מכך שבני-האדם מנותקים מעצמם. "האלכימאי", ספרו של הסופר הברזילאי (1988) פאולו קואלו Paulo Coelho , שתורגם לאחרונה לעברית על ידי רבקה ונדעון ברוך ואטוניו קוסטה, בהוצאה "כתר", מזמין את הקורא/ת להשתתף במסעו של רועה כבשים (הנער סנטיאגו) מאנדלוסיה שמחליט לעזוב את עדרו ומולדתו ולחפש את פשר חלומו. חלום החוזר על עצמו מבטיח לו מציאת אוצר אך נקטע ללא עקבות דרך לפענוחו. מפגשים באותות וכוחות אלוהיים, מנחים את הנער בדרכו, בהיותם טמונים בטבע ובמסתורין של העולם. אלה מגלים לו שרק אם יבין את שפת נשמת העולם ויכוס לתוכה, בהאזינו לקול הפנימי האמיתי, ימצא את דרכו. הקוראת המעוניין/ת ימצא אולי מפתח אישי לפענוח (כמו שמתאפשר למשל בספרו של אקזופרי "הנסיך הקטן", בספרו של קרלוס קסטנדה "האש שבפנים" או בספורי ר' נחמן מברסלב), והבנה של המסע הפרטי והציבורי בעולם. ספר מומלץ שנכתב בשפה פשוטה לאנשים פשוטים היודעים שהחיים הם מלאכת אריגה קדושה, שתפקיד האדם בה הוא לגלותה ולחיות אותה נכונה. ומה לדוגמא גילה הרועה?.. הינה לסיום, קטע: " כבר מזמן שם לב שברגע שהוא מתעורר, רוב העדר מתחיל גם הוא להתנועע. כאילו איזה כוח מסתורי קושר את נפשו אל נפש הכבשים האלה....(ש)חי בחברתן והובל אותן ברחבי הארץ בחיפוש אחר מזון ומים. הן כל כך רגילות אלי, עד שהן יודעות את לוח הזמנים שלי, מלמל. ואחרי שחשב על זה לרגע, עלה על דעתו שאולי זה להיפך: זה הוא שהתרגל ללוח הזמנים שלהן". (שם-עמוד 9).

Syrian manoeuvres a concern to defence planners

By ARIEH O'SULLIVAN
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – The Defence Ministry is reportedly putting heavy pressure on the government not only to reverse the Finance Ministry's proposal to cut NIS 850 million from the defence budget, but to increase it by hundreds of millions of shekels, to deal with the growing threat of confrontation with Syria.

The army is closely watching the beefed-up Syrian army's winter manoeuvres on the Golan Heights. Given the chemical warfare capabilities and the sophisticated ground-to-ground missiles that have been added to the Syrian arsenal since 1973, war could be far more costly than in the past.

For nearly two months, two regiments of Syrian commandos trained in airborne assault have been positioned on the northern slopes of the Hermon. Behind them is a crack armored division transferred from Beirut.

These are in addition to the three regular Syrian divisions positioned permanently opposite the Golan Heights. And the IDF watches.

"Massing the concentration means [Syrian President Hafez] al-Assad can play games with you," said one senior commander. "We can watch for three weeks and then let our guard down for two hours and then what have we achieved?"

Assad is getting the IDF used to the new situation, knowing it cannot afford to confront the Syrians man for man. This way, he maintains the initiative.

"The Syrians have carried out a chain of events which allow them to cut the time they need to go into action," said Labor MK and former chief of general staff Ehud Barak last Sunday. "We are now at one of the most sensitive and tense times in the past 15 years."

Barak told Channel 1 that the government must take all steps to prevent a deterioration of the situation.

The fear is that if Assad, whose goal is to get the Golan Heights back, feels peace talks are deadlocked, he will opt for a limited military strike which could be used as leverage for this aim.

"If we stay on alert for a number of months against the Syrian army we will cause great damage to the state," said Barak. "If, God forbid, we get to the point of an attempt by the Syrians to snatch sections of the Golan or the Hermon and we repel it immediately, we will cause great damage to Israel's security whether it succeeds or fails."

Barak called on Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to allow the IDF to carry out any deployment it needs at any cost to keep forces on high alert. "Anything else will simply be irresponsible," he said.

Israel has a considerable technological advantage over Syria. Assad knows his T-72 tanks are no match for the Merkava, but his are 20 times cheaper. He can also keep his troops in position to threaten the Golan for a long time and whittle away at Israel's increasingly expensive deterrence.

The problem is that the Defence Ministry's books, unlike those of other ministries, are not open to the public, and we must accept as fact that what the military claims it needs, it really needs.

The IDF spokesperson declined requests to speak with the general staff's financial adviser.

Attack in Golan predicted

By ELDAD BECK
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

BEIRUT – A senior Jordanian diplomat says Syria is preparing for a surprise military attack on Israel in the coming weeks.

According to the diplomat, the Syrians plan to attack before a new U.S. president is sworn in. The Syrians believe that, during the post-election period, the new U.S. administration will not be ready to dispatch forces to the Middle East.

The diplomat revealed that high-level contact between Syrian and Jordanian officers took place recently in order to examine the military situation in the region.

The Syrians have asked the Jordanians to conduct military manoeuvres next to their border with Israel, to force the IDF to move troops from the Golan Heights.

According to the diplomat, the Syrians believe their army will be able to establish a bridgehead on the Golan and that the IDF currently is in a state of weakness. The goal of the Syrian military operation would be to force Israel to accept a total withdrawal from the Golan Heights, he said.

The Syrians believe that in the shadow of a new military conflict in the Middle East, the international community would mobilize to impose an Israeli withdrawal from the Golan.

A French official in Chirac's entourage, which met with Syrian President Hafez al-Assad for 14 hours, said that Chirac got the impression from his talks with Assad that Syria wants peace.

Israelis divided one year after assassination

By LEORA EREN FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

'Every day that passes we hurt more and more'

TEL AVIV – "The man who fired the shots... murdered Yitzhak Rabin. But he wounded all of us," said Israeli writer Amos Oz last week. "And every day that passes we hurt more and more."

With those words, Oz summed up what so many Israelis feel one year after the assassination of their prime minister: they are aching badly. It is not only individuals who have failed to come to terms with the loss. It is an entire country. On the first memorial of Rabin's murder, Israel is marred by a gaping wound that shows few signs of healing.

Nowhere is this more apparent than at the place where the wound was inflicted – Rabin Square. Last Wednesday night, Israelis began gravitating to the spot where the prime minister was killed one year ago following a giant peace rally. Labor party youth, wielding torches, marched quietly, retracing Rabin's final route from the plaza where he was shot in the back to Ichilov Hospital where he died. Then many of them returned to the scene of the crime and stood silently – until they saw a very different group of mourners. Men in knitted kippot and women wearing head-scarves had set up a small booth where they were distributing stickers and selling T-shirts calling for Unity of Israel (Achdut Yisrael).

"What are you doing here? Get out of here!" yelled a teenage girl from the Labor delegation.

"We're here to preach unity," responded a religious woman at the booth.

"Go somewhere else and preach," shouted another youngster from the Labor group. "This is our place. He was our leader."

Soon a dozen people were exchanging charges and counter-charges until all that could be heard was a cacophony of angry voices.

It was a scene that was repeated at different venues all over Israel that night and the next. On TV programs, at memorial ceremonies and in people's homes the same questions were asked: Who has the right to mourn Rabin? Who is to blame for his death? And what is his legacy?

The answers showed Israelis as sharply divided as ever along the familiar fault lines of left versus right, secular versus religious.

Voices from the mainstream religious, right wing called for a truce, for harmony, unity, reconciliation. "All we want is for Rabin's sacrifice to bring us together," said Sylvia, the woman distributing the "unity" stickers at Rabin Square.

And all over, the left rejected the plea, labelling it hollow and insincere.

"Today they are carrying a banner of unity and tolerance," scoffed one of the Labor teenagers at the square. "But where were they just over a year ago when the religious and right wing were calling Rabin a traitor and portraying him in an SS uniform? It's just a masquerade – this call for unity."

"Crocodile tears!" charged Aviva, a Tel Aviv woman, as she watched Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu lay a wreath upon Rabin's grave at last week's televised memorial ceremony. "He's the one who most benefited from the murder."

Like many on the left, Aviva was mourning not only the loss of a leader, but the loss of what she sees as his legacy.

"With the murder of Rabin, they killed our dream of peace," she lamented. "It will be generations until we see another leader who can turn that dream into a reality."

The religious right could not share Aviva's sorrow. "I mourn the murder of a Jew by a Jew. I mourn the loss of the man who liberated Jerusalem in 1967," said Ya'acov, an observant Jerusalemite. "But I shed no tears over the blow to Rabin's peace plans. For me, the Oslo accord was a nightmare."

Then there were those who did not mourn at all. In the haredi neighborhood of Bnai Brak, students marked the death of the matriarch Rachel, but not the murder of Rabin. "Why mourn Rabin? There are people murdered all the time. We can't mourn every one of them – only the ones that the Torah tells us to mourn," said a Bnai Brak woman to a television reporter.

And at the state religious school in Kiryat Gat – where a Yigal Amir fan club was uncovered last month – several students were incensed that Rabin's death was being commemorated at all.

"Many religious people regard Rabin's death as a miracle," said Bar-Ilan University sociologist Prof. Nissan Rubin. "In the same way that Jews were always saved from trouble at the last moment, here once again a miracle occurred. Rabin was killed and we were saved."

Against this bleak background, there were a few sparks of hope. At the base of Mount Herzl, religious Jews erected a tent in Rabin's memory to bring Jews together for study and soul-searching.

"It is a beautiful idea," said Leah Rabin, who visited the tent following the memorial ceremony for her husband at Mount Herzl.

A teenage girl from the Bnai Akiva youth movement told of her difficult dialogue with secular students. "In the past year, I've been spit at and called a murderer when I have walked through secular neighborhoods," she said in a television interview. "But things have changed. Last year the hatred was so deep that we didn't even try to talk to one another. Now at least we are talking. It's a small step. But it's something."

But these stories were the exceptions.

We will not forgive and we will not forget, has become the rallying cry of the left.

That was the mood at Rabin Square when Sylvia, a lone religious woman, squeezed her way into a secular crowd gathered around a candlelit memorial to Rabin. There, above the flames, she held up a sign calling for unity and tolerance. People glared at her.

"It irks me that she's here," muttered one woman.

"Who is she flashing that sign at? She's the one who needs to learn tolerance," snapped another.

Sylvia ignored the comments and joined the mourners in quiet song – until they began to chant Shir HaShalom – the Song of Peace, the song Rabin sang moments before he was shot, which later became the election anthem of the left-wing Meretz party.

More and more voices joined in, but Sylvia's fell silent. She stood frozen, waiting for the song to be over. And then she quickly walked away, taking her unity banner with her.

CJN CHANUKAH POETRY CONTEST

The CJN announces its second annual Chanukah poetry contest.

Who can enter: Anyone can enter except CJN employees or members of their family.

There are three age categories for entrants:
1. Twelve years old and under. 2. Thirteen to 18 years old.
3. Eighteen years old and up.

How to enter: The poems must be about Chanukah; they cannot be longer than 40 lines. A maximum of one poem per entrant may be submitted. Please include your name, age, address and phone number with the poem. We would prefer to receive typewritten poems if possible. We will return poems if you send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

You may mail or deliver your poems to: CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest, The Canadian Jewish News, 10 Gateway Blvd., Suite 420, Don Mills, Ontario, M3C 3A1.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 18, 1996.

Prizes: The judges will choose six poems to be published, two from each of the three categories, which in their opinion, most poetically and evocatively convey an aspect of the meaning of Chanukah. Each of the "winners" will also receive a cheque for $50.

Only six poems will be selected as "winners". Space permitting, we may publish other poems as honorable mentions. The decisions of the judges will be final. The odds of "winning" depend upon the number and the quality of submissions received.

How the winners will be notified: "Winning" entrants will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, Nov. 22, 1996.

When the prizes will be awarded: The winning poems will be published in The CJN of Dec. 5, 1996. We look forward to receiving your poems. May the miracle of Chanukah and the magic of its light be reflected in your poems.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Regie des Loteries et courses du Quebec.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 21

• Sari Nusseibeh, president of Al-Quds University, warned that war will break out between Israel and its neighbors if no agreement is reached on Hebron and the peace process collapses.

• Israel's Minister of Public Security, Avigdor Kahalani, arrived in Washington for a four-day visit.

Oct. 22

• The High Court of Justice ruled that the Ministry of Religious Affairs must re-evaluate its funding criteria to end discrimination against female yeshivah students.

Oct. 23

• President Ezer Weizman called upon Yasser Arafat not to delay the negotiations on an Israeli troop redeployment in Hebron. Talks on security aspects moved into high gear when IDF chief of staff Amnon Shahak and senior PA official Abu Mazen personally joined the negotiations.

• After receiving warnings about the possibility of suicide attacks in Israel, security forces stopped the movement of Palestinian trucks from Gaza into Israel.

Oct. 24

• A graveside ceremony on Mt. Herzl was the focal point of a day of memorial services for Yitzhak Rabin. The ceremony on Mt. Herzl was attended by the family, President Ezer Weizman, Knesset Speaker Dan Tichon, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, the diplomatic corps, other dignitaries, and Rabin's close aides and friends.

• The six-month deadline for the Palestine National Council (PNC) to establish a legal panel to draft a new Palestinian covenant passed without the creation of the panel.

Oct. 25

• Two Israeli soldiers were killed and four were wounded at a roadside bombing in southern Lebanon. Hezbollah was responsible.

Relations with Egypt turn downright frosty

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Israel's relationship with Egypt has often been described as a "cold peace." But of late, it has turned downright frosty.

Mideast Analysis

Israel's mercurial relations with Egypt, sorely tested by crises ranging from Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon to the Palestinian uprising in 1987, have degenerated sharply in the past year.

Despite a recent fence-mending trip to Egypt by President Ezer Weizman, during which he conveyed assurances that Israel would hew to commitments to the Palestinians, the tension shows no signs of flagging. Unless there are fundamental breakthroughs in Israel's peace negotiations with the Palestinians and with Syria, the cause of some of the problems, the situation is likely to fester.

Israel's ties with Egypt — the first Arab country to officially recognize the Jewish state — are conditioned by the Arab-Israeli dispute and by Egyptian domestic politics.

Although Egypt regards itself as a bridge between Israel and the Arab world, Egypt has never failed to criticize Israel when it has been in conflict with an Arab country or at odds with the Palestinians. Egypt, too, has never forgiven Israel for having failed to implement the Palestinian autonomy provisions of the 1979 peace treaty.

Egypt's attitude is also governed by the fact that substantial segments of its population, spearheaded by its intellectual and Islamist classes, remain hostile to Israel and Zionism.

As a result of these factors, as well as Egypt's regional rivalry with Israel (Egypt resents Israel's military ties with Turkey), Egypt has kept Israel at arm's length all these years. It has resisted cultural links with Israel, curbed Egyptian tourism in Israel, restricted trade and refused to muzzle the largely anti-Israel, state-controlled press.

Egypt's view of Israel transcends Israeli partisan politics. In its final year in power, Israel's Labor party government antagonized Egypt on two counts.

• Israel declined to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. Instead, Israel proposed a nuclear-free zone in the Mideast, following a comprehensive peace settlement which included Iran, Iraq and Libya.

• Israel declined to investigate allegations that Israeli soldiers had murdered Egyptian prisoners of war during the 1956 and 1967 wars. Egyptian newspapers subsequently claimed that Israel's ambassador in Cairo, David Sultan, now its envoy to Canada, had taken part in the alleged killings

These incidents, together with Israel's perception that Egypt's foreign minister, Amr Moussa, is unfriendly to Israel, prompted Yitzhak Rabin, the prime minister, to speak of "an ill wind blowing" from Cairo.

Cognizant of these unfavorable developments, Benjamin Netanyahu, the new Israeli premier, made it his business to improve relations with Egypt. Shortly after the May 29 general election, Netanyahu telephoned Mubarak, and Mubarak invited him to visit Cairo. (Such an invitation was never issued to Yitzhak Shamir, Netanyahu's Likud predecessor).

From the outset, Egypt had clear expectations of Israel. It expected Netanyahu to honor agreements, embrace the land-for-peace formula, withdraw from all the territories and accept a Palestinian state with East Jerusalem as its capital.

At their meeting in Cairo on July 19, Netanyahu convinced Mubarak that he was sincere in his desire for peace. According to Israeli reports, Netanyahu promised Mubarak that he would not build new settlements, that he would deploy from Hebron and that he would move on to final status talks with the Palestinians.

Egypt adopted a wait-and-see attitude to Netanyahu, though its popular press mercilessly lambasted him (one daily began to refer to Netanyahu as "Natan Yahu," which means "This is the rotten one" in Arabic.)

By August, with the peace process at a virtual standstill and with Israel having decided to expand its settlements, Mubarak concluded that Netanyahu had deceived him. In reponse, he angrily hinted that the regional economic conference in Cairo, planned for November, might be cancelled.

Mubarak withdrew this threat. But Egypt has since escalated its rhetoric, despite Foreign Minister David Levy's visit to Cairo.

The deputy foreign minister compared Israeli cabinet ministers to dinosaurs. The defence minister suggested that massive military exercises were designed to impress Israel. The foreign minister, accusing Netanyahu of trying to impose an unbalanced peace on the region, spelled out Egypt's usual demands on Israel.

Mubarak's boycott of the Washington summit, called to address the unprecedented violence in the territories last month, was merely the latest manifestation of the growing acrimony between Egypt and Israel.

Levy has asked Mubarak to call a halt to Egypt's rhetorical salvos. But Mubarak does not appear to be listening.

Hebron settlers disappointed after meeting PM

By NAOMI SEGAL
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM – The Jewish settlers of Hebron are not getting the answers they seek.

In meetings with top-level Israeli officials last week, including Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, representatives from Hebron's Jewish community warned that Israel is about to make a "fatal mistake" by redeploying Israeli troops in Hebron.

The meetings came as Israeli and Palestinian negotiators intensified their discussions to reach a final agreement on the redeployment.

It also came amid reports that Jewish settlers had opened fire on Palestinian homes in Hebron.

Settler leaders, who have been warning of a bloodbath if the Palestinian Authority assumes control of Hebron, emerged dissatisfied from their meeting with Netanyahu.

"We asked questions about security and civil matters, and didn't get any answers," Noam Arnon, the spokesperson for the Hebron Jewish community, told Israel Radio. "I think the country is about to make a fatal mistake."

As The CJN went to press, we received reports that Hebron talks had broken down and U.S. Special Middle East Co-ordinator Dennis Ross had returned to the United States.

"These agreements can hold up as long as the situation is calm. But as soon as there are any arguments or misunderstandings with the Palestinians, they will collapse," he said.

The settlers also met with the coordinator of government activities in the territories, Maj. Gen. Oren Shahor, who negotiated civilian issues in the Hebron talks.

The settlers also emerged from that meeting disappointed, saying that the Hebron agreement would ultimately "strangle" the Jewish community there by not allowing it to grow.

Meanwhile, U.S. Special Middle East Coordinator Dennis Ross continued his mediation efforts to complete the Hebron agreement.

"It's clear that we have further narrowed the differences that exist, but we have not overcome those differences," Ross told reporters after meeting Netanyahu in Haifa.

He was scheduled to hold talks later in the Gaza Strip with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat, who was scheduled to travel this week to Europe.

"Clearly the pace of negotiations is affected when the leaders are not here," Ross said, adding the clear hint that he would leave the region if Arafat left for Europe.

Israeli officials said last week that nearly all issues of dispute had been resolved in the negotiations.

Netanyahu told reporters that negotiations on Hebron were "at an advanced stage" and their conclusion rested solely on "Palestinian goodwill" to complete the process.

But Palestinian officials said a number of key points remained unresolved, including Israeli demands for freedom of movement in Palestinian areas to safeguard Hebron settlers.

The pins and needles atmosphere in Hebron was underscored last week after a shooting incident in which Jewish settlers reportedly got out of their cars and began firing on Palestinian houses along the road.

The settlers said they fired in the air after Palestinians threw rocks and bottles at them. There were no reported injuries.

Israeli journalist allowed into Syria

By ELDAD BECK
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

DAMASCUS – The Syrian authorities officially allowed me – an Israeli journalist, born in Israel and representing the Jerusalem Post – to enter the country on a foreign passport to accompany President Jacques Chirac on his trip to Damascus.

Chirac personally intervened to convince the Syrians to permit the visit. Sources stressed that Chirac's gesture was designed to prove that France is a friend of all the countries in the region and is seriously seeking to help advance the peace process.

Jerusalem Post correspondent David Makovsky had previously visited the Syrian capital.

Hours before leaving Paris for Damascus, Chirac invited eight Arab and Israeli journalists, including myself, the Post's correspondent in France, to his office at the Elysee Palace. It was the first time that a French president had gathered journalists together from Israel and the Arab countries. The Paris-based correspondent of the Syrian news agency SANA also participated.

During Chirac's stay in the Syrian capital, I was able to meet freely with members of the Damascus Jewish community and to attend Shabbat prayers at one of the two synagogues that are still open.

The Damascus Jewish community numbers 150 people, who have opted to stay in Syria, although the authorities would allow them to leave. They want to keep their businesses and preserve their houses and the holdings of the community.

Some Jews who emigrated to the United States a few years ago have returned because they were unable to find work. They accuse the American Jewish community and U.S. authorities of not having done enough to help them.

"Here we have a good life, while there they want us to become beggars. If they wish us to leave Syria, they must help us to get houses and jobs," said David Bukai, who returned from the United States a few months ago. However, a majority of the community has left for the United States or Israel, leaving behind no religious infrastructure.

Damascus has no more rabbis or kosher butchers. A rabbi from Istanbul visits every two months to arrange ceremonies and take care of other religious affairs.

Members of the Jewish community say the authorities' attitude toward them has improved. "They protect us and respond to all our demands," Rose Ouzon said.

A senior French official said that for years Chirac had refused to visit Syria, since Damascus did not allow Syrian Jews to leave.

During his 42-hour visit to Damascus, Chirac met three times with President Hafez al-Assad for private discussions regarding the situation in the Middle East, the future of the peace process and bilateral ties.

The senior French official said Chirac intended to bring up the issue of Israeli MiAs, including missing airman Ron Arad. Chirac also intended to try to get information about Nazi war criminal Alois Brunner, who, according to several sources, has been living in Syria. Brunner was responsible for the deportation of tens of thousands Jews from France to Auschwitz.

The official emphasized that Chirac has been been trying for years to get information about the MiAs, without any success.

Farrakhan rally features new song, same old tune

By DEBRA NUSSBAUM COHEN
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK – Louis Farrakhan may have changed the name of the song, but the violinist and former calypso singer is still playing his favorite tune.

Whether the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) "likes it or not, whether the mayor likes it or not, I have to tell the truth and if you say this is hatred then I say that you are the haters," the leader of the Nation of Islam told more than 30,000 of his followers at a rally here last week.

Billed as the World's Day of Atonement, the day was part evangelical preaching and part black empowerment rally, filled with messages of black pride and white hatred, a desire for peace and exhortations to warlike rebellion.

His followers, eager to hear Farrakhan explain their marginalization, filled the area across the street from the United Nations and against the back of the headquarters of the ADL.

Farrakhan spoke for more than 2½ hours from behind a four-sided structure made of bulletproof plastic. He said he had to be shielded from attack because "not everyone loves me."

The ADL was on a high security alert because the rally came just days after an editorial, "ADL: Enemy to the people," appeared in the Oct. 8 edition of the Nation of Islam newspaper the Final Call.

"We are used to demonstrations here and once in a while, the sponsors are not our best friends," said ADL national director Abraham Foxman, who refused to detail the security precautions his organization took beyond working with the police.

"This is a little bit new in the sense that we were targeted," he said. "The Nation of Islam made clear that they really wanted it at our site, though originally I thought they wanted it at the UN and that the ADL was incidental."

Held on the first anniversary of Farrakhan's Million Man March, the rally drew many back for a second time.

John Lewis had come to New York with 32 other people from his hometown in Knoxville, Tenn.

He said he had been a formal follower of Farrakhan's for six months, his interest sparked by last year's event, which he attended as part of a three-bus caravan from his city.

"I like what he has to say," said Lewis, who declined to comment on the minister's anti-Jewish rhetoric.

Khassin Rigner came from Staten Island to the rally because "this is my religion."

Louis Farrakhan

When asked whether he agrees with Farrakhan's statements, he said, "I have nothing against what he says about Jews."

"He's speaking the truth!" yelled one woman, who refused to give her name, after she overheard a journalist asking another attendee about Farrakhan's anti-Jewish attitudes.

"He never killed nobody, he never burned them, never was in the Holocaust! He speaks the truth about Jews," she shouted shortly before Farrakhan began speaking, attracting the bemused interest of many in the packed crowd.

Another attendee, a woman who said her name is J. Sketch, said she appreciates Farrakhan's message of black unity, but is not sure what to make of his anti-Jewish rhetoric.

"I've heard him say that the Jews were tentacles, but I'm not sure he speaks of all Jews. I think he's talking about a certain amount who may be wrong, just like some people are wrong in all groups.

"I take it in and decipher it and make up my own mind," she said. "I'm receptive because it's about black people coming together. That's why I'm here."

Surrounded by a phalanx of Fruit of Islam guards dressed in militaristic black uniforms, Farrakhan spoke of U.S. government and international conspiracies against blacks and Arabs. Over and over he slammed whites, the U.S. government and the United Nations for being oppressive and unjust.

But the only ethnic or religious group he singled out was the Jews. Though barely mentioned in most media accounts of the rally, the minister's anti-Jewish rhetoric was, as it often is, ardent and plentiful.

In the beginning of his speech, which was delivered like a fire and brimstone sermon and filled with references to biblical characters and narrative, Farrakhan said, "The apple tree [of wisdom] is drying up among the Jewish people."

He compared the Jewish people to "the locust, which eats away the foliage."

He later spoke of Jewish control of business and government and said, "The black people and the red [people] are the fulfillment of what is written in the Torah, the Gospel and the Koran.

"We were sold [as slaves] to Europeans, Arabs and Jews," he said.

"If the Jewish people has something to do with our enslavement then the Jewish people must have something to do with our expiation," he said in a soaring, angry voice.

"If you accept this judgment," he said, apparently addressing the Jewish community, "and turn swords into plowshares, then we can avert all war!"

"I got a hard job," boomed Farrakhan at the rally. "I have to tell the leaders of America where they're wrong, the leaders of the world where they're wrong."

"That don't make me loved, but I am loved by the people who are catching hell. I love you brothers and sisters," he said.

And the crowd roared back: "I love you, too, Minister Farrakhan."

U.S. investors seek to purchase El Al

By DAVID HARRIS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — A group of U.S. investors is prepared to purchase El Al, without the airline operating on Shabbat, Israel's Transport Minister Yitzhak Levy told the Jerusalem Post recently.

Levy, who would not identify the prospective investors, said he has held meetings over the last two months with the Israeli representatives of these religious Jewish businessmen.

Despite this development, Levy also said he favors a public flotation of El Al rather than a single sale of the controlling shares in the company. Levy expressed this view following a visit last week to the successfully privatized British Airways.

"In my opinion, the privatization should be by public flotation, because at the end of the day we're talking about a company with national significance," said Levy. "I see the privatization as having several stages, which should take approximately two years, but the program must start today."

Levy has made it clear on several occasions he will oppose any attempt to let a privatized El Al operate on Shabbat. "Even after being privatized, El Al has to protect the national character by not flying on Shabbat," he said in August, during a visit to El Al's Ben-Gurion office.

Having taken a closer look at the issue, Levy said he remains convinced the Shabbat issue is not the key economic factor. "I personally believe most of the losses are not accrued by not flying on Shabbat," said Levy. "They appear, in the main, to be the result of a steep decline in tourist numbers, something that is not only affecting El Al but all aspects of tourism in the country."

Report Labels 1996 Year Of Slow Growth

JERUSALEM — Early indications suggest a slowdown in the economy this year, particularly in Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and exports, the Central Bureau of Statistics (CBS) reported recently.

The forecasts are based on statistics collated between January and September.

The increase in GDP this year is likely to be only four percent, compared to seven percent in both 1994 and 1995. GDP represents the total of goods and services produced.

Initial conclusions are that there will be a relatively high increase of six percent in domestic consumption. This follows rises of eight percent in 1994 and seven percent last year.

However, there is a slowdown in the export of goods and services. Exports are likely to end the year showing an increase of four percent, compared to 11 percent to 15 percent in each of the last four years.

The import of goods and services will increase by some seven percent to eight percent, which is comparatively high in relation to the predicted GDP, according to the bureau.

This information, provided by the CBS, will be presented to MKs in the Knesset debate on the budget on Oct. 29.

Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has asked the Bank of Israel to consider a considerable reduction in interest rates if and when the government successfully pushes its budget cuts through the Knesset.

Trade Deficit Up

JERUSALEM — Israel's trade deficit, excluding diamonds, totalled $11.3 billion in the first nine months of the year, up some $1 billion, on the January to September figure in 1995, the Central Bureau of Statistics reported.

No PMs At Summit

JERUSALEM — The third annual Middle East/North Africa economic summit in Cairo next month will not be held at prime ministerial level, the summit's general coordinator, Shoukry Fuad, told the Jerusalem Post last week.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Amir Moussa distributed invitations on a ministerial level a fortnight ago, and so far no attempt has been made to include government chiefs or heads of state, said Fuad.

The Israeli ministers that have confirmed their attendance are David Levy (Foreign), Dan Meridor (Finance), Natan Sharansky (Industry and Trade), and Limor Livnat (Communications), according to the Foreign Ministry.

Finance Committee Asks Gov't To Back Brodet Plan

JERUSALEM — Members of the Knesset finance committee expressed strong support for the Brodet Report on reforming the capital markets, and called on the government to accept its recommendations.

Israeli Finance Minister Dan Meridor decided not to attend the committee until after the government reconsiders the issue in the next two weeks. Still, Treasury director-general David Brodet outlined the contents of his report, which recommends a package of measures encouraging long-term investments.

"In the developed world, they fund large infrastructure projects with money from long-term savings such as pension funds," said Brodet. "Here this is missing, and that is negatively affecting Israel."

The aim of the proposals, he said, was "to make long-term savings the main player in Israel's economy, as in other countries. Currently we have no organized way of attracting these savings through the government."

Bank Sells Surplus Holdings In Clal Israel

JERUSALEM — Bank Hapoalim has sold its surplus holdings in Clal Israel to IDB Development for NIS137 million, the companies told the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) last week.

The holding company acquired 1.8 million ordinary shares of Clal, representing six percent of the company's stock capital. The shares were purchased at a rate of NIS76 for every NIS1 share, about two percent higher than the market value of the shares on the TASE.

IDB Development now directly controls 42.7 percent of Clal's stock, making it the largest shareholder in the company. Clal is one of Israel's biggest public investment companies.

Kitan To Fire 110 Workers

JERUSALEM — Workers at the Kitan textile factory in Beit She'an are preparing for a long and bitter fight for their jobs, following an announcement of management's plans to close most of the plant.

Most of the facility will be shut down this month, leaving about 110 of the 180 workers without work. The Beit She'an plant will continue to operate its Levis Laundry and finished products warehouse.

The company has blamed government policies, especially the economic program, which has kept the shekel high against the dollar, resulting in much lower profits for the company's exports.

Elite To Sell Foreign Factories

JERUSALEM — Elite Industries intends to enter negotiations with a European food company, in an attempt to sell its coffee factories in Spain, Belgium and France, the company said in a Tel Aviv Stock Exchange announcement.

The European company has offered to purchase all three of Elite's no-brand name coffee factories in these countries. Elite refused to provide additional details of the discussions.

The Making Of Ragtime The Musical

It was the music of something beginning...and it was the music that E. L. Doctorow listened to as he began, in 1972, to write the story that would become the best-selling novel Ragtime.

High-stepping and syncopated, the music of the ragtime era, as composed by Scott Joplin and others, "was a perfect metaphor for the age, when all of America was finding a new sexy rhythm," Doctorow tells us.

"A modern sensibility was forming that scandalized the old. There were new ideas, bold ways of thinking and behaving, ever increasing technological changes, and above all, in a country marked by the great wealth of a few, and the terrible poverty of many, new and strident demands for social justice. In fact there were Negroes, there were immigrants, and they could not be ignored."

This is Doctorow, writing in the liner notes of the new CD release, Songs From Ragtime, The Musical.

The CD is a lush and generous prelude to the Livent Inc. theatrical production that opens at North York's Ford Centre Dec. 8 (previews begin Nov. 19) for a run of at least 16 weeks. The musical is scheduled to open on Broadway in December 1997.

Set in and around turn-of-the-century New York, Ragtime is a panoramic tale of three families whose lives intertwine with a parade of celebrities: auto magnate Henry Ford, illusionist Harry Houdini, capitalist J.P. Morgan, radical anarchist Emma Goldman and sex symbol Evelyn Nesbit.

Doctorow, dismayed that the 1981 film adaptation dropped many of these characters, was reluctant to allow a live musical version until Livent chair Garth Drabinsky pledged to put all of Ragtime's characters on stage.

After playwright Terence McNally (Kiss of the Spider Woman) delivered a 60-page treatment of the novel in mid-1994, Livent invited 10 pairs of composers and lyricists to write four songs, based on McNally's treatment.

The winners were lyricist Lynn Ahrens and composer Stephen Flaherty. Three of the songs they wrote for the try-out were so strong that they survived into the production.

McNally, Ahrens and Flaherty finished a first draft in August 1995. A week later some 34 actors, under the tutelage of director Frank Galati, began to workshop the production at York University.

"The script was an amoeba, changing shape constantly," recalls Marty Bell, Livent's creative coordinator. By this time, some key casting decisions had already been made: Audra McDonald as Sarah, Brian Stokes Mitchell as Coalhouse Walker, Jr. and Camille Saviola as Emma Goldman.

As more cast and creative personnel joined the work-in-progress, several private and semi- public performances were given, including a reading last December at which the novelist was present.

"Edgar [Doctorow] had warned us early on that he was going to be as tough on this work as he was on his own," Bell reports. "But at a dinner for the company at a Chinese restaurant...he was quite visibly moved. He had notes for us, sure. But his overall response was that he was honored by McNally's faithfulness to his conception and thrilled by the appropriate yet original musical sound that Ahrens and Flaherty had provided."

Last July, 82 actors and musicians crammed into a downtown studio to record a CD of selected highlights from the score. If it were an old-fashioned vinyl LP, my copy of Songs from Ragtime would be quite scratchy from playing by now. To my ears, it's a masterpiece of breathtaking syncopation, emotional depth and poignant Sondheimian irony. Even in advance of its theatrical opening, I have a hunch that Ragtime The Musical is going to be an explosive hit.

The story of Ragtime bears particular relevance for North American Jews, since it begins where Fiddler On The Roof leaves off, with Tevye's children and other shtetl residents boarding ships for America. Ragtime tells what happens to such immigrants, as well as the Negroes, in the great American melting pot.

For tickets, visit the Ford Centre box office or call the Livent line, 416-872-2222.

Sherman at Bloor JCC

On Nov.3 as part of the Books & Bagels series at the Bloor JCC, 750 Spadina Ave., Toronto, playwright Jason Sherman will read from his plays The League of Nathans, The Retreat and Reading Hebron.

Admission $6. 416-924-6211.

Peter Krausz Exhibit

Running through to Nov. 16 at the Leo Kamen Gallery, 80 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Peter Krausz's art exhibition Landscape and Memory attempts to deal with the historical persecution of Jews.

For Krausz, images of nature are inscribed by history and imbued with traces of human passage. Krausz works within the pictorial traditions of a landscape vocabulary, incorporating known iconographic symbols as a means of reviewing conventional associations.

The most striking exhibit is Ciel de plomb, where 175 rectangular lead panels are attached to the wall, stretching the lenght of the gallery. The thin painted plates, each bearing the image of a small brilliant landscape, are interspersed among others inscribed by a date and placename. For Krausz, the nature of the installation belies the textual facts related to the historical persecution of Jewish people.

Russian Dance & Music

The Russian Dance and Music Company returns to the Leah Posluns Theatre, Toronto, Oct. 30-31 and Nov.2-3. for its latest production, The Gala Variety Show.

The show features energetic and colorful Russian dancers, Viennese music (from Strauss to Lehar), Gypsy selections, a circus high rope act and a tribute to jazz and ragtime.

For showtimes and tickets call 416-222-3758.

Aaron Skitri To Perform

Virtuoso lute player and guitarist Aaron Skitri, hailed as "one of the world leading authorities in his field," by The Ottawa Citizen will be performing at the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue in Toronto Nov.3 at 8 p.m.

Skitri only uses authentic instruments to play Baroque music as it was written 300 years ago. He will also play some Spanish guitar selections.

Also appearing that evening is Rabbi Matityahu Glazerson, director of the Lev Eliyahu Razon Institute in Jerusalem, an author of 18 books and composer.With the aid of computers, he has uncovered secret Biblical codes and mystical revelations made in the Torah 3,000 years ago. He uses Gematrica to explain how authentic Judaism relates to all humanity.

TV documentary reveals the man behind the violin

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Yehudi Menuhin is one of the greatest violin virtuosos of the 20th century, and it is always a pleasure to hear him making music.

But who is the man behind the polished wooden instrument he wields so brilliantly? You can find out by watching Yehudi Menuhin, a two-part documentary which airs on Nov. 12 and again on Nov. 19 at 10 p.m. on TVOntario.

An amalgam of on-air interviews, archival footage, old newspaper headlines and excerpts of his major concerts, Yehudi Menuhin is an altogether delightful film.

One of the reasons is Menuhin's personal magnetism. He is clearly a man who enjoys the fine art of good conversation, and viewers will likely agree.

Menuhin, who turned 80 this year, ranges far and wide as he recalls his childhood as a prodigy and his development into a star of the classical musical world.

And he is never less than candid. In a startling admission, he confesses that he might have been "an unbalanced character" had he not been able to fulfil himself as a musician.

Pungent anecdotes brighten up this film, and one of the best concerns his mother, a beautiful, impetuous, demanding woman to whom he was very close.

Shortly before she gave birth to Yehudi, she looked for a nice apartment for her family. As she was about to sign the lease, the landlord said, "You'll be pleased to know we don't take Jews."

Offended by the remark, Menuhin's mother promptly changed her mind about the flat, and there and then decided to name her son Yehudi. As he reminisces about this episode, Menuhin smiles broadly.

As the film unfolds, we learn that his parents met in Jaffa, that his father was a superintendant of Hebrew schools in San Francisco, that his mother tongue was Hebrew and that he was discovered at the age of 10 by the Romanian star violinist Georges Enesco.

Menuhin was certainly a rare talent. Headlines from the 1920s hail him as a "boy genius" and a "new Mozart."

During and after World War II, Menuhin learned how to communicate directly with an audience. Playing for wounded Allied soldiers convalescing in hospitals and for displaced Jews, he learned how to reach and touch people.

Menuhin had a special affinity with his sister, Hephzibah, a gifted pianist, and there are clips of the pair performing a spirited concert.

Some of the brightest moments of Yehudi Menuhin occur when he shows off his prowess with the violin. He plays Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart and Bartok and the sounds he produces are ethereal.

Menuhin is not loath to praise fellow musicians. Remembering a memorable performance by the Canadian pianist Glenn Gould, he speaks of his divine and mystical presence.

All in all, Yehudi Menuhin is a fine film, distinguished by its accommodating subject and its dedication to great music.

Big city traffic merges with old-world appeal of Lisbon

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

LISBON, PORTUGAL — "The car is coming — inhale!" instructed our Portuguese escort.

Immediately and in perfect synchrony, we flattened our backs against the whitewashed medieval buildings flanking the steep cobblestone road in Marvao, a quiet border town some 250 kilometres from Lisbon. Seconds later, the lone vehicle had passed and we continued to make our way to the castle ruins at the top of the hill.

Our small group walked through similar picturesque areas in about half a dozen towns within a three-hour drive of Portugal's capital. A number of the medieval sections are noteworthy for their onetime Jewish presence.

The medieval synagogue/museum in Tomar, a 90-minute drive from Lisbon, is worth visiting, as much to meet its guardian, Luis Vasco, as to see the vaulted ceilings and adjacent excavated mikvah.

Vasco, a 59-year-old Marrano who has embraced "open" Judaism with gusto, greeted us with a warm "Shalom. Shalom U'vracha." He speaks both English and Hebrew, having taught himself the latter from cassette tapes.

The synagogue boasts only a few Portuguese artifacts, but has become a home for Judaica items sent to Vasco from around the world. In summer, he removes the Torahs from the ark, because too many of the tourists wear shorts or are otherwise inappropriately attired, he said.

The old-world appeal of Portugal's small towns is evident even in Lisbon, with its one million inhabitants (two million including nearby bedroom communities) and concomitant big-city traffic.

Built on seven hills, the city is reminiscent of San Francisco, with a similar temperate climate, stairs carved into some of the steeper streets and houses built right into the hillside. There's even a bridge on Lisbon's Tagus River that's practically a clone of the Golden Gate.

Another world landmark (the Eiffel Tower) influenced the design of an ornate early 20th-century elevator leading from a downtown Lisbon street to an overhead walkway through which pedestrians can reach the crest of a nearby hill.

International influence aside, Portugal has plenty of indigenous charm. Rich with a sense of history, the country abounds with medieval castles, churches and monuments to historic figures.

Some 40 museums

Unique among the many tourist sights — Lisbon alone has some 40 museums — is the capital city's Museu Nacional dos Coches (National Coach Museum), one of only a handful of its kind in the world. Included in its fairy-tale-pretty collection, which dates as far back as late 16th-century, are gilded coaches painted in exquisite detail by leading artists of the day.

In Portugal, it's easy to be lulled into a feeling of having gone back in time, although nightlife and entertainment are anything but sleepy. At clubs frequented by the younger generation, the action begins well after midnight and continues until dawn.

Fado, the traditional emotive singing about love and loss, is still popular with locals of all ages. Sometimes, however, there's a modern twist: a new fado song about a popular Portuguese bullfighter was received with enthusiasm at Lisbon's João da Praça fado club.

For travellers who like their accommodations to reflect the history — and beauty — of the area, some of Portugal's old monasteries and castles have been converted to pousadas (inns), as part of a government-sponsored project that began several decades ago.

We spent a night in Estremoz at the 30-room Pousada Rainha Santa Isabel, home in a previous incarnation to 13th-century King Dinis and Queen Isabel. A late-day swim in the shadow of the original castle tower proved irresistible, and the views overlooking the town prompted yet another round of picture-taking.

Frances Kraft was in Portugal recently as a guest of the Portuguese National Tourist Office and TAP Air Portugal.

Beth Tikvah's boys of summer win synagogue baseball title

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In what is becoming a familiar fall ritual, Beth Tikvah has once again claimed bragging rights as champions of the Inter-Synagogue Baseball League.

The boys from Beth Tikvah defeated Shaar Shalom 15-10 in a hard fought battle on a chilly evening under the lights at Grandview Park.

The game was "a true fall classic" and the win was dedicated to the memory of former teammate Jeff Secter, who was killed in the Dominican Republic in 1994, said Beth Tikvah captain and shortstop Howard Goldkind.

The tight championship game was broken open by a two-out rally with clutch hitting from Beth Tikvah's Rob Waxman, Neal and Ian Solomon and Mitch Aidelman.

Adi Feigelson and Dave Kroach also delivered key hits while Beth Tikvah's defence shut down Shaar Shalom's bats.

At 15-10, the game was a defensive struggle given that 30-run tilts are not unusual, Goldkind said. The 16-team league, consisting of Conservative and Reform congregations, plays a three-pitch game in which the pitcher throws to his own teammates. That puts a premium on great defence and Beth Tikvah had it when it counted, looking like a bunch of golden-glovers in snuffing out Shaar Shalom rallies, Goldkind said.

The combination of young legs and "veteran savvy" on the roster keyed Beth Tikvah to the win, he added.

The team posted an 8-3 regular season record and then went on to defeat Temple Sinai, Beth David and, in a double header, Holy Blossom and Beth Emeth, in playoff action.

The game versus Holy Blossom — a 19-17 squeaker — was the toughest of the post-season. Beth Tikvah had to score four runs in the bottom of the ninth to pull it out, Goldkind said.

Beth Tikvah, which has won the league title five times since play was inaugurated in 1987, didn't roll over anybody in the playoffs. Each game was tight, showing that the league has achieved a degree of parity, he said.

Goldkind attributed that to the influx of new blood, many of them the sons of longtime players who compete in other leagues. That's made for a better brand of baseball while ensuring the continuity of the league, he said.

Glasman's association with soccer club ends

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The association of entrepreneur Francois Glasman with the Shooting Stars indoor soccer club is over.

Following a series of corporate manoeuvres, Glasman lost his position as the club's 50 percent equity owner and president.

The turn of events has devastated Glasman, who says he's "been taken out of my dream."

Glasman, whose French-accented voice has graced many radio and television commercials, was the driving force behind efforts to bring arena soccer to Toronto. As promoter of youth soccer leagues, he's worked to build the sport at the grassroots level and create interest in the fast-paced, action-filled brand favored by the National Professional Soccer League.

The Shooting Stars played their first-ever home game on Sunday.

Ex-smoker runs half-marathon

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Two years ago, Harvey Karp was a two-pack-a-day smoker who was hooked, big time, to the malodorous weed.

One day, he decided to give up the cancer sticks and begin to get his body back in shape. Slipping on his runners, he headed out for a jog but six minutes later he was back at home feeling sick to his stomach.

Last week, with plenty of preparation behind him and battling the cool wet weather, Karp crossed the finish line after running 21 kilometres at the Canadian International Marathon.

"I ran it in one hour and 47 minutes, which is really good for me," the 43-year-old accountant said.

After running the first five-kilometre leg of the relay for his firm of Richter, Usher and Vineberg, Karp settled into the steady slog of finishing the 21 km race. He was joined by his son, David, towards the end of the race and though his hip was hurting and his knee was close to giving out, Karp pushed himself over the finish line.

"It felt great. It was a great feeling to run with my son," he said.

The 2-year-old marathon, organized by Jay Glassman, is a fundraiser for the Ontario Cancer Institute and the Princess Margaret Hospital.

Karp credits a program he took two years ago with helping him achieve something that would have been only a pipe dream before.

When he decided to quit smoking, he realized he couldn't do it by himself so he enrolled in a smoke cessation course at Branson Hospital. Part of the technique he was taught was to visualize a goal he'd always wanted to achieve. For Karp, it was crossing the finishing line after running a 26-mile marathon.

He'd always been athletic, playing baseball, oldtimer's hockey and football on a social level, as well as squash. But that first run, all six minutes of it, was a wakeup call to his deteriorating state of health. Afterwards, with a newfound determination, he began to increase the frequency and distance of his jogging.

"The next day I went seven minutes and I didn't feel good," he recalled. With his visualized goal ahead of him, he pushed himself and eventually worked himself into creditable shape. By last May he was pounding the pavement for two hour stretches at a time time. A half hour run was "easy."

Prior to the marathon, he was running five to seven times a week, every week, and following the training techniques set out by expert long-distance runners.

Last week, however, with lots of miles under his belt since then, Karp was able to realize his dream. "When I crossed the line, it was like I had visualized it," he said.

"Maybe next year I'll run the full marathon."

Harvey Karp (right) and his son, David, celebrate after Harvey successfully completed the half-marathon at the Canadian International Marathon recently.

New machine helps treat carpal tunnel syndrome

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A machine recently approved for use in this country by Health Canada — the CTD Mark-1 — has proved useful for treating carpal tunnel syndrome, according to Thornhill chiropractor Dr. Brian Kleinberg.

Carpal tunnel syndrome is a major concern in both the United States and Canada. Statistics Canada reports that in 1994, the disorder cost business over $1 billion, and represented over 100,000 cases of injury.

Repetitive hand and wrist motions tighten the ligament that supports the wrist bones on the palm side of the hand and wrist, causing the median nerve to become pinched or trapped between the flexor tendons and carpal bones.

This causes tingling and numbness, usually worse at night, clumsiness, fatigue, grip weakness and pain. There may also be pain in the forearm, elbow, shoulder, neck and upper back.

It affects mainly those in the workplace, especially those with repetitive tasks, such as computer and assembly line jobs.

Treatment up to now, Kleinberg told The CJN, has, and often still does, include medications like Naproxen, aspirin, corticostteroid injections, heat, laser therapy, ultrasound, physiotherapy, splints, exercises, and, in very serious cases, surgery.

The CTD Mark-1 machine has been used in the United States for four years, and is now distributed in Canada by CarpalTec Systems Inc. of Port Colborne. It is a pneumatic decompression device, which works on the biomechanics of the carpal bones.

During the treatment, which is painless, the elbow is immobilized to prevent any arm movement. A velcro band attached to a pneumatic actuator exerts pressure on the forearm and wrist, which, usually in about six treatments, Kleinberg says, relaxes the ligaments and decompresses the carpal tunnel and the median nerve.

Patients also use splints at night, to prevent further injury by inadvertent twisting of the wrist, and receive exercise instruction from a kinesiologist.

Kleinberg also goes into the workplace to recommend changes in the work environment to prevent the injury from recurring. Suggestions may include special chairs, adjusting the height of machines, or having the employee stand on a padded mat, to lessen the pressure on the muscles.

Many sufferers do not go for help until the syndrome is very far along, Kleinberg said. It's one thing, since the symptoms seem to improve during the day, they often don't take it seriously until the pain gets bad. As well, since the economic climate is precarious, some workers are concerned about losing their jobs if they complain.

Chiropractic services, which include the CTD Mark-1 therapy, are only partially covered by OHIP, although, Kleinberg said, many insurance companies cover the difference. Workers' Compensation covers the fee entirely.

For more information, contact Kleinberg at the Dufferin-Steeles Chiropractic Health Centre, 905-738-6303.

Gilda's Club gets funding

TORONTO — Gilda's Club Greater Toronto recently announced a funding commitment it has obtained from Toronto's Original Jewish Pages.

Effective immediately, Gilda's Club Greater Toronto will receive five percent of all directory advertising revenues from the Jewish Pages.

"This is a wonderful example of the support and commitment that Gilda's Club needs today in order to establish a permanent home in Greater Toronto by the fall of 1998," said Lorna Rosenstein, general manager of Lotus Development Canada and president of Gilda's Club Greater Toronto.

"We want to express our gratitude to all advertisers in the Jewish Pages."

The Jewish Pages is a consumer directory filled with community and reference information. It is published twice a year and delivered by Canada Post to 50,000 families in Metro Toronto.

Scheduled to open in September 1998, Gilda's Club Greater Toronto will be a place where people with cancer and their families and friends can go for social and emotional support as a supplement to regular medical care. The free non-profit, non-residential facility was named for the late comedian Gilda Radner, who lost her battle with ovarian cancer in 1989.

PM evades question on Arad

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, during a recent visit to the navy base in Haifa, was asked if the government had received any new information regarding missing airman Ron Arad as a result of efforts of German mediator Bernd Schmidbauer.

Netanyahu said: "I will say that our view of the Ron Arad situation has not changed. We have always considered him to be alive and in captivity and we expect his captors to heed the most basic humanitarian principle of returning him home to his family and his people."

Prior to his visit to Haifa, Netanyahu paid a condolence call on the widow of Col. Nabih Mari, at her home in Hurfeish in the Galilee. Mari was killed in Rafiah during the eruption of violence following the opening of an exit to the Western Wall tunnels.

"Mr. Prime Minister, I want to ask you a question and I want you to answer it," Sharha Mari told Netanyahu as they sat in her home. "Several days ago, a number of students from the Mt. Meron Field School came here on a condolence visit and asked me if I was angry with the Palestinians or somebody else.

"I answered them that I was angry with the government and the prime minister because you opened the tunnel without discussing it with my husband or his colleagues in the army, or the army itself.

"And you have seen what the opening of the tunnel did – 15 soldiers were killed and I lost my husband and my only daughter lost her father. What was it worth. Why did you do it?"

Netanyahu evaded the question, while stressing that Israel is trying to achieve peace with the Palestinians.

Tracing Yemeni children

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Blood samples will be taken from 1,000 parents and other close relatives of Yemenite children who allegedly disappeared during the early years of the state, Health Minister Tzahi Hanegbi decided recently.

The DNA fingerprints of the families will be compared with those from small bits of bones in 10 graves that have been identified as those of Yemenite children.

Health Ministry director general Gabi Barabash will supervise the project, which will be carried out by Dr. Yehuda Hiss, director of the Institute for Forensic Medicine at Abu Kabir and a professor at Chaim Sheba Hospital in Tel Hashomer.

Activists claim the children were taken from their parents and adopted by veteran Israelis. The parents, they say, were told the babies had died in hosptials.

Fiscal firestorm shakes U.S. branch of JNF

By CYNTHIA MANN
Special to the CJN

NEW YORK – A fiscal firestorm has shaken the roots of the Jewish National Fund of America (JNF).

JNF has employed sloppy accounting procedures that have misrepresented how much of its money is sent to Israel, according to the results of an investigation.

A panel appointed by JNF to probe the organization's financial practices has found it innocent of allegations of fraud, malfeasance and misappropriation of funds.

But the panel found that the charity, which raised roughly $30 million (US) last year, engages in accounting "inefficiencies" that make it hard to determine exactly how the money is spent.

Avner Regev, executive vice-president of JNF Canada told The CJN that JNF Canada has "nothing at all to do with American JNF. We are a completely separate entity. JNF Canada has its own annual audit."

The findings have rocked the organization, long viewed as one of the jewels of Jewish philanthropy. It has shaken the confidence of some of its supporters and was expected to lead to at least one high-level resignation.

One of the most potentially damaging findings is that so little money gets to Israel when JNF's historic mission is popularly understood as planting trees and developing the land.

While some promotional JNF material suggests that nearly 70 percent of its budget goes to Israel, only 21 percent of the agency's total expenditures actually find their way to the Jewish state.

Nearly twice as much money stays in the United States for what JNF calls Zionist education and "Israel-based programs."

For their part, JNF officials have responded to the report with pledges to overhaul the organization's accounting and fiscal operation, to reduce administrative and fundraising costs and to revise JNF's method of reporting allocations to Israel.

JNF executive vice-president Samuel Cohen refused repeated requests for an interview about the investigation, which was initiated in the spring after donors raised questions about JNF spending.

But in a letter sent to the media, he and JNF president Milton Shapiro wrote that "the worst allegations of misconduct are simply untrue."

The stakes were high in the investigation, with reverberations extending far beyond the fate of one organization.

The JNF mission to make the deserts of Israel bloom is sacrosanct.

For decades, children have placed coins in JNF's signature blue boxes with visions of planted saplings destined to mature into sturdy trees.

The vision, inseparable from JNF itself, was always an emblem of the fledgling state defying nature by putting down roots in a region that was not a naturally hospitable one.

JNF Canada untouched by scandal

JNF's universal appeal is reflected in its constituent organizations, which support and contribute to its work. Those groups include B'nai B'rith, Hadassah, Na'amat USA, Amit and Religious Zionists of America.

The probe has shaken the confidence of some supporters, who say they feel betrayed by JNF.

The investigation was conducted amid an atmosphere of drama, innuendo and bitterness, judging from an extensive series of correspondence obtained by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency and a reference in the committee's own findings.

"The committee has determined that there is no evidence of fraud, misconduct, malfeasance by JNF personnel, nor is there evidence of misappropriation of JNF funds," wrote the panel, which was chaired by Marianne Bretton-Granatoor, in-house counsel for Merrill Lynch.

However, the report continues, "a number of management, accounting and fundraising inefficiencies" are "in large part, responsible for the atmosphere of suspicion which has provided a catalyst for many of the recent accusations leveled at JNF."

The investigation included an independent audit by the accounting firm Deloitte & Touche, which was requested by the four-member panel appointed in April by Shapiro.

The probe was triggered in the spring after Stephen Breslauer and Ben Guefen, two activists from Houston, began raising questions about what they perceived as discrepancies in JNF's accounting. They did so after having been invited in mid-1995 to take the top lay positions in their regional organization.

In letters to JNF lay and professional leadership across the nation and in interviews, Breslauer repeatedly said that he had no interest in hurting JNF's enterprise. He said he only wanted clarification about JNF spending practices after being named the head of a foundation whose primary beneficiary was JNF.

His concern was also piqued after a disturbing personal discovery.

After the Breslauers' son died, the couple designated in January 1995 a $10,000 gift for a woodland in the JNF AIDS forest near Beersheva. When they went to Israel the next spring, they found that no trees had been planted for their son.

"The funds were absorbed totally in JNF operations and in purchasing a plaque," he wrote in a letter to Bretton-Granatoor in June. "Is it not a misrepresentation to describe that donations are made to reforest Israel (whether one tree or 1,000) when little if any of those funds is used for that purpose?"

Meanwhile, what Breslauer viewed as his inability to get thorough answers helped fuel a series of investigative pieces on JNF by freelance journalist Yosef Abramowitz. The articles were recently published in a few Jewish newspapers.

The auditors, for their part, concluded that there were no missing millions. Some of the discrepancies they found, often reported only in the fine print of footnotes to their report, were due to inconsistent financial reporting practices, they said.

Nonetheless, some of those discrepancies resulted in clouding the true spending practices of the charity.

HERB CAPLAN SELLS JENN-AIR
1111 Weston Road (S. of Eglinton) 767-1655 FOR LESS

CABBAGE ROLL CASSEROLE

1/2 medium cabbage, shredded
3 tblsp oil
1 1/2 lbs. minced beef
2 onions, minced
2-8 oz cans tomato sauce
1/2 tsp. savory or oregano
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. pepper
1 cup cooked rice

Place 1/2 shredded cabbage in a well greased baking dish. Heat oil in a large frying pan. Stir in the beef. Cook until it loses its redness. Add onion, half a can of tomato sauce, savory, garlic, salt, pepper and rice. Stir to blend thoroughly.

Pour remaining 1/2 can tomato sauce over the cabbage mixture. Cover with rice mixture. Place remaining cabbage on top, then pour second can of sauce over all. Bake 1 hour at 350°F. Serves 6.

Dorot Foundation

PROVIDENCE, R.I. – Dan Magder of Toronto and Ayelet Cohen of Hampstead, Que., are two of the 18 young adults who have been awarded fellowships in Israel for 1996-97 by the Dorot Foundation.

The Dorot Fellowship in Israel was created seven years ago to help develop a knowledgeable Diaspora Jewish lay leadership. Fellows stay in Israel for 12 months. After participating in an intensive Hebrew language program, they spend the rest of the year in part-time academic study and part-time internship in a field of interest of their own choosing.

The fellowships are open to candidate in their 20s and 30s who have graduated from college or university, especially those who have demonstrated commitment to public service in the general or Jewish community, an interest in learning about their Jewish heritage and personal qualities of leadership.

For more information about the fellowship, one can contact Rebecca Starr, Dorot Foundation, 439 Benefit St., Providence, R.I., 02903; telephone: 401-351-8866; fax: 401-351-4975. Or one can e-mail: Rebecca@Dorot.org.

About Seniors

Dear Jesse,

I was very nervous before the referendum. I live in Montreal and thought that I would feel better when the No side won. But now with talk about another referendum I just don't know what to do.

My children moved to Toronto and Calgary several years ago and now my grandson is being transferred to Calgary. I own my home but I can't afford to sell it. I will have to stay here. If I get sick, will I have to go to a hospital where no one will speak my language?

J.F.

Dear J.F.,

Don't panic. Anglophone services are available where the numbers of people in a community warrant it. At this time there is no reason to believe that this will change. None of us know for sure what the future holds so try to enjoy whatever you can, now. If you have family and friends in Montreal you may prefer to stay.

On the other hand if you would be comfortable living elsewhere then you may be willing to accept a lesser amount for your property. Please, discuss this carefully with your family and take some time to make your decision.

Readers are invited to send any questions they have for Jesse to The CJN. Jesse is the executive director of Jewish Support Services for the Elderly (JSSE) in Montreal.

Dear Friends,

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Givat Haviva on the outstanding work you are doing to promote tolerance, cooperation and peace. Throughout the years, Givat Haviva has worked tirelessly to enable a future of democratic co-existence among all the people of Israel.

Givat Haviva's workshops and seminars have helped Jews and Arabs understand each other's culture and break down commonly held stereotypes. Arabs learn about the impact of the Holocaust on the Jewish people and how it has affected Israel's policies, while Israeli Jews learn to understand about the challenges facing Israel's minorities. Above all, Jewish and Arab youngsters examine their differences in a setting of democracy and tolerance.

The peace process will only succeed if it takes hold at the grassroots level. The efforts of Givat Haviva are an important contribution to this urgent goal.

Wishing you continued success in your endeavors.

Sincerely yours,

Y. Rabin

Hebron's Jews will stay: PM

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — "There will be no uprooting of the Jewish community in Hebron – not now, not tomorrow, and not ever - in any shape or form," Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu vowed last week.

Featured as the guest speaker at the National Religious Party's (NRP) central committee meeting in Tel Aviv, Netanyahu cited "maintaining and strengthening the Jewish community of Hebron and safeguarding the tombs of our patriarchs" as his government's twin goals in the current talks on redeployment. If these goals are not secured, he promised, there would be no agreement.

Netanyahu's appearance was anticipated with some trepidation, on the assumption that he would face a severe onslaught from those who consider his plans for redeployment a betrayal. However, his words were often received with tumultuous applause. The only vocal challenge came from Noam Arnon, spokesperson for the Jewish community in Hebron, who said that "this party cannot acquiesce to the relinquishing of the City of the Patriarchs to foreign rule."

"This is not only your personal problem, but also mine and the problem of your children and my children, too," Netanyahu replied.

This did not prevent the central committee from empowering the NRP's Knesset faction to seek changes in the redeployment agreement as it is currently shaping up.

Netanyahu said he hopes the agreement would minimize friction between Jews and Arabs in Hebron and "would not compromise the safety of Hebron's Jews or our right to act to ensure security. Our aim is not just to make certain that the Jewish community is not strangled, but that it can live, in all senses of the word; that it can grow and develop."

When the permanent settlement is negotiated, he continued, the government will want to achieve "the broadest possible national consensus." He intimated that he does not mean a national unity government but "proposals which will unite the majority of the nation and which will serve as an essential tool in the attainment of the sort of agreement with which we can literally live and which will make sure that settlement in Eretz Yisrael not only continues, but develops, prospers and grows."

Netanyahu also lamented the "lack of values in our educational system. We are seeing nihilistic influences at work – there is no homeland, no nation, no flag, and arising from this, there is no army and no sense of duty to participate in its actions."

Education Minister Zevulun Hammer told the meeting that the two NRP ministers would examine the Hebron agreement before deciding whether or not to support it.

During an address earlier last week to the Israel Export Institution Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu attributes responsibility for the delay in concluding an agreement over Hebron to the stalling tactics of Yasser Arafat. [Reuters/RNS photo]

Ottawa names suspected Nazis

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A former member of the Royal Hungarian Police and a Nazi collaborator who participated in atrocities against civilians in Belarus are the two latest men facing loss of citizenship as alleged Nazi war criminals.

Documents filed in Federal Court last week by the Justice Department alleged that Vladimir Katriuk of Montreal was a member of the Ukrainian Schutzmannschaft Battalion 118 (later Battalion 63) from 1942-44 and collaborated with German authorities in Ukraine and Belarus, as well as taking part in atrocities against Belorussian civilians.

Ladislav Csizsik-Csatary of Montreal, who recently moved to Toronto, is alleged to have been a member of the Royal Hungarian Police in Kassa, Hungary, now Kosice, Slovak Republic, and was involved in the internment and deportation to concentration camps of thousands of Jews.

Federal authorities are attempting to strip the two of their Canadian citizenship on the grounds they withheld information about their wartime activities when they were admitted to Canada and when they obtained citizenship.

The cases have been referred to the Federal Court for adjudication.

Toronto lawyer William Halkiw, who represents Csizsik-Csatary, said his client denies the allegations of war crimes.

Katriuk, who a is a beekeeper, also denied the allegations, saying he was a Ukrainian nationalist persecuted by the Soviets

"I've been set up by the KGB," he told CBC TV's The National. "I'm an innocent man...They have no proof against me...I doubt it."

Katriuk, 75, came to Montreal in 1951 with his French wife and evetually bought a three-storey apartment building in Rosemont. He sold the building several years ago and spends most of his time at a country home in Ormstown, the Montreal Gazette reported.

Csizsik-Csatary, 81, came to Canada in 1949 and lived in Montreal until moving to Toronto in the spring.

Csizsik-Csatary moved to Toronto to be near his wife, who is ill, and to be close to his family, Halkiw stated in a letter that was filed in Federal Court along with government documents.

Jewish groups welcomed the announcement of the two new cases. They have been lobbying for years for legal action against alleged Nazi war criminals.

"We commend the government for continuing to bring forward suspected Nazi war criminals in this country but the pace is still far too slow," said Irving Abella, chair of Canadian Jewish Congress' war crimes committee. "There is no longer any sand in the hourglass. Every effort must be made to bring these alleged mass murderers to justice. It was stated very clearly by the Justice Department nearly two years ago that they had a list of 12 people against whom they intended to launch proceedings. Why have they not named the other four?"

The News in Brief

ISRAEL

Support for Hebron

JERUSALEM – A crowd Israel Radio estimated at 10,000 people braved the rain and demonstrated in downtown Jerusalem in support of the Jewish settlement in Hebron, then marched to the nearby U.S. Consulate, where they called on the United States not to pressure Israel into redeploying in the city.

Speakers at the rally took pains to stress that the protest was not against Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, but rather in support of retaining control in Hebron.

Dayan Attacked

JERUSALEM – A Jerusalem man has been charged with deliberately throwing a cup of hot tea in the face of Labor Knesset member Yael Dayan in Hebron.

The incident occurred when Dayan, who suffered burns on her face and chest, arrived at the Tomb of the Patriarchs with other members of the Knesset committee on the status of women.

The man, Yisrael Lederman, maintains that he was pushed from behind and did not deliberately throw the hot tea. He also accused the police of suppressing evidence that supports his claim.

Settler Held In Death

JERUSALEM – Israeli police have laid murder charges against a security guard for the West Bank Jewish settlement of Efrat after he allegedly caused the death of a 10-year-old Palestinian boy.

In an incident near Bethlehem, security guard Nahum Kurman stopped his vehicle after stones were thrown at his car, chased the boy and kicked him in the head, Palestinian witnesses said.

Kurman denied that he ever touched the boy. The boy was admitted unconscious to Hadassah Hospital in the Ein Kerem section of Jerusalem, where he died.

An autopsy revealed that the boy died from a brain hemorrhage caused by a sharp blow, Israel Radio reported.

WORLD

Hungarian Rally

BUDAPEST – Demonstrators shouted anti-Semitic remarks during an ultra-rightist rally held here last week to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the 1956 Hungarian uprising against Soviet rule.

The demonstration, during which some 25,000 people gathered outside the Parliament building, was far larger than the official government ceremony held to mark the doomed uprising.

Dozens of people shouted "bloody Jew" when a reporter asked some neo-Nazis in the crowd about their plans.

EU's New Envoy

LUXEMBOURG – The European Union has named Spain's ambassador to Israel, Miguel Angel Moratinos, to serve as a special EU envoy to the Middle East.

The 15 EU foreign ministers gave Moratinos a mandate at Monday's meeting here to establish contacts with Israeli and Palestinian negotiators and to suggest possible EU initiatives for advancing the peace process, according to diplomatic sources.

MINISTER RELAYS SOVIET'S MESSAGE

In a letter to Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mitchell Sharp, sought to explain that Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin's reference to "riff-raff" during his visit to Ottawa was not directed [as previously reported] to those who demonstrated on behalf of the Jewish community.

Sharp claimed that the comment was directed against a Burke Society member who attacked him on Parliament Hill. "This interpretation was subsequently confirmed by reporters and officials in discussions with Kosygin's interpreter."

MEIR CLAIMS U.S. SPURS ARABS TO WAR

Premier Golda Meir accused the U.S. of encouraging the Arabs toward war rather than a settlement by withholding arms from Israel and yielding to Egyptian terms for an interim Suez agreement.

Meir made her accusations in a political statement to the Knesset at the opening of its fall session. She warned that no amount of pressure would force Israel to make political concessions that might endanger her security.

Peace requires patience, says ambassador

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO – Israel's new ambassador to Canada has appealed for understanding and patience with the Israeli government's peace policies.

"We need the understanding of our friends in Canada," David Sultan told an Israel Bonds event at the Four Seasons Hotel recently. "Bear with us. Have patience."

The peace process, he noted in his first speech to a Jewish organization in Canada, is of "crucial importance" to Israel.

But Israel wants to proceed carefully so as not to endanger its security, now or in the future, he added.

"Even after peace, you need a lot of patience," he suggested, referring to Israel's sometimes stormy relations with Egypt, the first Arab country to sign a peace treaty with Israel.

Sultan, Israel's former ambassador to Egypt, said Israel's quest for security was not "an obsession."

Sultan, who presented his credentials to Canada's governor general last month, disclosed that he recently briefed Lloyd Axworthy, the Canadian foreign minister, on Israel's talks with the Palestinian Authority.

Voicing optimism that the difficult negotiations would produce an agreement, Sultan said there is "no alternative to (Arab-Israeli) coexistence."

Turning to Israel's relationship with Canada, Sultan said one of his main objectives will be to expand the volume of trade, now that a free trade agreement has been signed.

Sultan said Israel and Canada are presently working on a cultural agreement that, he believes, will deepen bilateral ties.

In an upbeat assessment of Israel's economic performance, Sultan said that the unemployment rate has been curbed, that foreign investment has risen to $1.4 billion (US) this year, and that Israel's credit rating has improved.

Nevertheless, Israel still needs Israel Bonds capital, he said.

Dan Meridor, Israel's finance minister, was unable to appear at the function as scheduled because he was due to present the annual budget to the Knesset. Instead, he delivered his remarks in a video.

Meridor declared that Israel has recorded its seventh consecutive and unprecedented year of growth.

Israel's economy is growing at an annual rate of about six percent, and its gross domestic product (GDP) will reach $90 billion (US) this year, he reported.

The economy is booming as a result of the influx of Soviet Jews, the collapse of the Soviet Union, the opening up of new markets, the peace process and internal reforms.

Peace is integral to Israel's economic well-being, he explained, because it contributes to stability and in turn encourages investors.

Meridor said that Israel is helping the Palestinian Authority financially because both sides benefit.

"On the economic side, we have no interest in Palestinian unemployment and poverty," he observed.

Calling upon Diaspora Jewry to take part in the building of Israel, he urged Jews to visit, make aliyah, send their children to Israel, invest and purchase Israel Bonds.

IN THE SCHTETL

This painting by Ludwig Knaus entitled "In the Schtetl" and estimated in value between $47,000-$74,000, is one of the artworks seized by the Nazis from Jews during World War II that went on the auction block last week by the British auction house Christie's. [Reuters/RNS]

Clarification

The CJN's story last week on divisions within Israeli society in the aftermath of the Rabin assassination misrepresented the views of prominent Israeli sociologist Prof. Nissan Rubin. Prof. Rubin has been deeply critical of religious radicalism and the remarks attributed to him in The CJN were a comment on certain segments of Israeli society. They were not an expression of his own views. We profoundly regret the error.

A forceful plea for a caring government

Last week was quite eventful. Between the news emanating, as always, from around the Jewish world, and events closer to home, there was much to write about. The following are some observations that I recorded.

I had the profound pleasure of listening to Mario Cuomo, the former governor of New York State, address a gathering of business people and executives. He was in Toronto for a breakfast stop, part of a "tour" of Canadian cities, organized by The Canadian Institute of International Affairs.

The subject of his 90-minute presentation was, ostensibly, the American Election Campaign and its Aftermath. I say ostensibly, because he directed only a brief part of his remarks to the topic of the election. The majority of his time was spent in pleading forcefully, eloquently and passionately for a view of civic life and of public policy which includes "caring" government involvement.

His remarks were, to say the least, heartfelt and compelling. The coincidence of his visit to Toronto, a mere 48 hours after the weekend of organized Labor 's days of protests ensured that his comments would have a sharp poignancy and relevance.

Following are some of my notes and observations:

Cuomo said the election campaign had been "pathetic," devoid of any serious discussion of the range of possible solutions to the many serious problems plaguing the United States.

He observed that Bob Dole lacked a "rationale" for his campaign. He defined "rationale" as a defining vision, an overarching philosophical message for the voters. Dole's "rationale" had been lost to Newt Gingrich when the latter led the Republican House and Senate in their right-wing "revolution" two years ago.

The governor presented his assessment of the campaign efficiently and effectively. But it was when he moved on to the topic most precious to his public servant's heart, namely, the role of government, that his words took flight and passion accompanied intellect.

Waving his right hand and speaking in slow, deliberate tones, the governor proclaimed: "It should never be respectable for government to be without compassion, without concern, without care, for the less fortunate in society."

"We must not give up on the idea of the collectivity, on the idea of family, the idea that we are inter-connected and inter-dependent.

"It is nonsense to say that government is bad; that government has failed."

He considers the slogan "no more big government" to be the demagogue's boom box. It is a politically expedient slogan, nothing more. Moreover, in real life, it is simply not true.

For example, when natural disaster strikes, where do the local governments and the citizens look to for assistance? Or when man-made disaster strikes, as it did during the depression, for example, where did people turn for assistance?

"Pinning anger on the poor will not work forever.

"For us (Canadians too) to be as strong and as rich as possible, we have to make everyone (the poor included) as productive as possible."

Real common sense is to be found in mutual responsibility. It is folly to label it as liberalism; it is pragmatic, self-interest with a human dimension, serving the long-term benefit of the community and all those who call the community their home.

It was a privilege to hear him speak.

* * *

In contrast to Cuomo's behavior, in my mind, there was the behavior last week, of French President Jacques Chirac on his tour of the Middle East.

Chirac was in the region to make the case that Europe generally, and he specifically, should now be acting as a mediator in the negotiations between Israel and its neighbors.

But his assertion was both pretension and hypocrisy.

His trip was a constant embarrassment to the people of Israel while a constant pandering to the Arabs. He refused to address the Knesset; but he made certain to address the Palestinian Legislative Assembly in Ramallah. He could not bring himself to find anything positive to say about Israel's leadership, but found the most calming and reassuring things to say about Syrian leadership. He hectored Israel, but "stroked" its neighbors. His public, well-televised display of pique and anger at the Israeli security officer in the Old City was calculated to bring him the highest credit within the Palestinian world. But it was nothing more than transparently unctuous behavior to rival Dicken's Uriah Heep.

Sometimes our mistakes warrant additional mention to the clarification or correction we print in the paper. Last week The CJN committed such a mistake.

Leora Eren Frucht, our outstanding award-winning correspondent in Israel, wrote an article about the distressing fractures appearing within Israeli society in the wake of the murder of Yitzhak Rabin.

In the article, she quoted an observation of the schism by one of the country's leading sociologists, Prof. Nissan Rubin of Bar-Ilan, to the effect that some people regarded Rabin's murder as a miracle. She inadvertently left the impression, however, that the quote reflected Rubin's personal opinion. He was in fact commenting on a view held by others. The opinion was not his private belief.

On the contrary, Rubin is one of the country's most courageous critics of religious extremism and one of the country's leading advocates of social harmony and unity. He was among the first to call for chesbon nefesh, soul-searching, within the religious community.

As we have stated elsewhere in the paper, we profoundly apologize to Prof. Rubin and to Bar-Ilan University for any embarrassment which we caused by the mistake.

Israeli consul prepares to leave

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Haim Waxman has shmoozed with the politicians and battled the media to set the record straight on Israel. He's gone out to the Canadian hinterland to visit the smaller Jewish communities and he's tried to lay the foundation for improved relations with religious and ethnic communities.

But it's his work in promoting the artistic, creative and talent-laden Israel that he finds particularly rewarding as he winds up his term as Israeli consul for Toronto and Western Canada.

After four years in Canada, Waxman is cleaning his desk, packing his papers, labelling his personal items and getting ready to return to Jerusalem with his wife Amalia and two young daughters.

His stint in Toronto has seen plenty of highs and lows, from the signing of the peace plan with the Palestinians to the conflict that erupted only a month or two ago. But in an interview in his downtown office, he is happiest when he focuses on a project that is near and dear to his heart.

"For the past four years, we've seen the cultural world as one of the most important goals that we have," the 33-year-old envoy said.

"We saw it as enabling us to reach a segment of society whose only knowledge of Israel comes from the media and that is almost all political — wars and violence. We were able to show them, through culture, the other, beautiful, creative side of Israel."

Promoting Israeli culture has always been on the consulate's agenda, but the goodwill engendered by the peace agreement and culture's apolitical nature, made the Canadian public more receptive to it, he said.

This is a process that is happening around the world, Waxman continued. "It reflects the world view of Israel to become more international, more open and to be engaged in a more varied dialogue."

As consul responsible for public relations (he also is in charge of passports and visas and administration), he's helped promote an Israeli choir's performance in a Toronto church; he took part in the organization of a week-long exhibition of the films of Gila Amagor at the Cinematheque Ontario; and he was instrumental in arranging for the performances of two young classical musicians who toured Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto and London.

Waxman said improving the perception of Israel among some churches that have been critical of Israel was also on his agenda as was improving relations with various ethnic groups, including local Arab and Palestinian communities. He's also proud of efforts to bring Canadian mayors from Vancouver, Markham, Ont., and Toronto to mayors' conferences in Jerusalem.

One constant in that varied agenda was the cooperation and support of the Canadian Jewish community, which is known in Israeli diplomatic circles for its strong Zionist attitude and its moral support of Israel. Despite that foreknowledge, Waxman admits that meeting Canadian Jews opened his eyes somewhat.

"The contact with the Jewish community was very important for mer personally," he said. "As someone who grew up in Israel, I don't think young Israelis really understand the Jewish Diaspora and what draws us together.

"Young Israelis rebel and say 'We don't know what ties us together.' It's important to see how much we are connected and how much we are part of the same family.

"Working here, you understand you have allies and realize we're not alone in our fight for the existence of Israel and for the survival of the Jewish world."

Waxman said that Jewish connectedness is the strongest impression he has from his time in Toronto.

An alumni of the Hebrew University's program in Russian and general studies, Waxman joined the diplomatic corps soon after graduating.

"I was attracted by the opportunity to represent Israel and work for Israel, which I think is a great privilege," he said. "Second was the opportunity to see other societies and to live in those societies."

A few weeks before he'll leave and he's already talking nostalgically about the he Annex area of Toronto, near the consulate. He enjoyed strolling in the area with Amalia, walking into bookstores and picking up the weekend Israeli papers.

Waxman expects to rejoin the Eastern Europe desk at the Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem and afterwards receive another foreign posting. He'll be replaced by Irit Goren, who has served for the last two years in Brasilia and Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Together with the posting of Jehudi Kinar as consul general, it will mark a complete changeover in personnel at the consulate.

Immigration targets concern JIAS officials

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Ottawa's announcement last week that it will hold the line on the number of immigrants allowed into Canada next year may make it even harder to enter this country, contends Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS).

What worries JIAS national director Perry Romberg in particular is Immigration Minister Lucienne Robillard's statement that the reason immigration levels won't rise in 1997 is the fear of a "social backlash."

"Right now in Canada, I must tell you that the population is divided," Robillard said. "I think that to have more immigrants in this country, we need the support of the population of Canada."

The minister referred to an Angus Reid poll last summer showing that 44 percent of Canadians thought Ottawa has been accepting too many immigrants. The same percentage said current immigration levels were about right.

In the same survey, 51 percent of respondents said immigration increases unemployment.

Asked if Ottawa fears a political backlash if it raised the number of immigrants next year, Robillard said, "It's not political backlash, it's social backlash."

Thus, the Liberals will hold the line at between 195,000 and 220,000 newcomers for 1997 — the same as originally projected for 1996. Robillard said the target numbers comply with the Liberal red book of election promises, which pledged to aim for annual immigration levels of one percent of the population — about 300,000 people.

She said next year's projection falls below that number "because we have to take into account the reaction of the people of Canada."

That concerns Romberg, who fears the government is caving in to public canards about immigrants.

"It's a nervous backlash ... a reaction to hysteria when there's high unemployment," Romberg told The CJN. He cited one study that showed 90 percent of immigrants get on their feet quickly and are not a drain on public finances.

JIAS is "concerned" about Ottawa's targets for next year. "It's a significant decrease [from previous targets] and it definitely worries us."

Romberg said new rules could make it even harder for immigrants to enter Canada next year.

In addition to setting overall levels, Robillard announced that the number of economic-class immigrants will rise to between 102,000 and 113,000 from 84,000, while the target number of family-class immigrants will fall from 78,000 to between 58,000 and 66,000.

That could mean additional hardship for JIAS clients, almost all of whom are from the former Soviet Union, Romberg said. Even now, applications to Canada for a family of four cost $3,000, while prospective immigrants must show they have at least $7,500 per adult and $2,000 per child in a Canadian bank account in their name.

"Not everyone has that money," Romberg said. "Apartments in Moscow may be sold for that much, but not in smaller cities."

Also a source of worry for JIAS is fewer family sponsorships for next year.

Economic-class immigrants will account for 60 percent of all cases next year, Robillard said. Family-class will account for about 35 percent, with the other five percent coming as would-be refugees.

At JIAS, 70 percent of cases are in the independent (including economic) class, and the rest family class.

In the past fiscal year, the agency handled 2,500 newcomers to Canada, most from the former Soviet Union. About 1,400 settled in Toronto.

In a statement, B'nai Brith Canada said it is "alarming" that Ottawa is formulating its immigration policy based on polls, "when the government knows that the public's perception of the economic effects of immigration is wrong.

"Instead of bending to a misinformed public, the Canadian government should be highlighting the economic and social benefits derived from new immigrants."

If Ottawa continues this policy, "it could again lead to a day when Canada shamefully slams its door shut on desperate refugees as it did prior to World War II," BBC said.

Multiculturalism Minister Hedy Fry and honorary chair Lincoln Alexander announce the creation of the Canadian Race Relations Foundation. [Ron Csillag photo]

Minister launches race relations agency

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Canada's multiculturalism minister last week announced that the federal Liberals are keeping another red book promise by launching the long-awaited Canadian Race Relations Foundation.

At the same time, Hedy Fry revealed new criteria for funding for ethnocultural groups — the first comprehensive changes to programs since multiculturalism was introduced in 1971.

The foundation, to be headquartered in Toronto, will serve as a research centre and clearing house for information on racism and discrimination, Fry told a press conference.

It was unveiled by former prime minister Brian Mulroney in 1988, as part of his government's package of redresses to Japanese Canadians, who were compensated for confiscation of property and incarceration by Canada during World War II.

The foundation will receive a one-time $24-million endowment from Ottawa, half of which will be donated by the government on behalf of Japanese Canadians as part of the redress agreement.

Parliament passed the law approving the foundation in 1991, but it was shelved in the wake of subsequent budget cuts. The Liberals promised in their red book of election pledges to set it up.

The body, which has been welcomed by Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith Canada, will operate at arm's length from the government. It will have an executive director and 15 board members from across Canada. Lincoln Alexander, a former federal cabinet minister and Ontario lieutenant governor, will serve as honorary chair.

The sole Jewish board member is Myer Horowitz, an Edmonton educator.

The foundation's mandate, Fry said, includes:

- to undertake research, collect data and develop a national information base to further understanding of racism and racial discrimination;
- to act as a clearing house for information and establish links with libraries and educational institutes;
- to help governments and the private sector draw race relations policies and practices;
- and to increase public awareness of the importance of eliminating racism.

The foundation's ambitious objective, Fry said, "is to find the root causes of racism and weed them out."

The minister also promised that a recent report highly critical of multiculturalism and how it's been sold to Canadians will not affect funding levels. The report recommended ending direct funding of ethnic groups because Canadians view it as catering to special interest groups.

Fry said the report was a small part of a general overview of her department's programs.

What will shift, she stressed, are criteria for funding. From now on, ethnocultural groups will have to demonstrate they espouse one or more of three principles in order to receive public funds: civic participation, social justice and the furthering of identity.

Fry called it "a more focused, efficient and results-oriented" policy, one that not only will mean no cuts in funds, but could even boost funding for some groups.

Alexander called the foundation's establishment "an historic occasion.

"Race relations in Canada are as solid as anywhere in the world but [racism] is still ripping holes in the fabric of society. We cannot sit back and do nothing."

Policy and myth

Last week the government announced it will allow approximately 200,000 newcomers — between 195,000 and 220,000 — to settle in Canada in 1997. This represents the same number of immigrants permitted into the country in the year now coming to a close. But it is still fully 33 percent less than the target advocated by the Liberals during the election which brought them back to power.

In addition, the government also announced it will be decreasing the number of immigrants allowed as part of family reunification, in favor of immigrants who are investors and skilled laborers.

The government's announcement is disappointing. There are at least three reasons for the disappointment. First, the quota itself is too low. It seems to us that the Canadian economy is sufficiently elastic to absorb a greater number. This would benefit the newcomers seeking to build a better life and, of course, Canada, the multicultural garden which becomes enriched and strengthened by the many new roots that are sunk deep into its vast, nourishing, free and democratic soil.

Second, the continued de-emphasis of family reunification weakens one of the pillars which props up the successful integration of new Canadians into our society. To be sure, investors and skilled laborers are able to contribute directly to local business and economic development. But the family, extended and nuclear, is most often the true backbone supporting the newcomer as he acclimatises to a new land, new people and a new way of life.

Third, and most disappointing of all, was the reason underlying the government's decision. The government is, simply, afraid to accept more immigrants.

Immigration Minister Lucienne Robillard justified the modest quota on the grounds that a larger one might risk a "social backlash" against the immigrants.

The minister acknowledged as "myth" the view linking increased immigration to increased unemployment. And rightly so. For she knows, as do economists and demographers, that immigration adds to rather than subtracts from employment. Immigration provides labor; it invigorates consumer demand; it spurs spending; it expands local markets; in short, it generates economic growth.

An example of this with which we are all familiar is that of Israel. Israel's economy has boomed in the past half decade, in large part due to the waves of immigrants that have reached her shores since 1989 .

And yet, she puts forward public policy that is based upon this myth. "I have to recognize the myth is there. To have more support of immigration in Canada, we need the support of the population," said Robillard. The minister is wrong.

In spite of the empirical proof, in spite of her own personal reservations, she has in effect, written public policy based on other peoples' incorrect and even objectionable assumptions. The implications of her action are distressing.

Are we destined in the modern age, to forfeit policy-making to the loudest, least informed, least charitable and least thoughtful articulators of loutish opinion? To be sure, opinion polls are an important factor when developing policy. No government can be too far out ahead of the majority view and still hope to last as the government. It would be naive and absurd to argue the contrary. But opinion polls should not be the determinant factor in formulating public policy. In the cybernetic, electronic, television age, public opinion is too inconstant and too unreliable. Like the colors of autumn, it is always changing.

Public policy must ultimately respond to the best, not the worst, qualities in our national character.

Florida bound? Check your insurance

It has become apparent that the protection offered by most insurers to Canadians spending time in the United States is for emergencies only. This is greatly different from health insurance. Moreover, some of the insurers have established lists of approved doctors and hospitals. In many cases, the insurer insists on being given notice before the insured visits the medical facility.

As there is no established or standard definition of "emergency," it is helpful to read the contract offered by the insurer before signing the application. How long does an emergency exist? The common practice nowadays is to return the patient to his province of residence, whereupon the insurance company has no further responsibility. What if there is a scarcity of hospital beds or lack of suitable facilities in Canada? Is outpatient treatment in the United States covered?

Perhaps the most important part of the insurance contract appears under the heading of Exclusions, Exceptions or Limitations.

There may be serious problems arising from the customer's medical history. They are known as "pre-existing condtions" and the consequences vary greatly with different insurance companies. The customer should be aware that the insurer can obtain this information (when authorized in the customer's application) from the provincial health department or commission.

Another feature gaining popularity is the existence of "deductibles," where the customer agrees to bear a specific dollar amount out of each claim or for the contract period.

When claims are made for treatment, the arrangements are usually handled by intermediate or "assistance" companies who, on behalf of the insurer, consider the details of each incident and determine the action to be taken.

As the travelling public grows older and the length of stay in the United States increases, the cost of insurance rises proportionally. Many insurers will not accept applications from people over 80 years of age, or others who have had serious medical complications in the past.

Congress made right move on Galganov

For the past few months, one of the most prominent advocates of anglophone rights in Quebec has been Howard Galganov. He recently led a campaign to boycott businesses posting French-only signs in predominantly anglophone areas of Montreal, and he has travelled to New York and Washington to denounce the aims of Quebec's sovereigntists.

In turn, Michel Gauthier, leader of the Bloc Quebecois, asked the Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) to dissociate itself from Galganov. The CJC rightly responded that Galganov had never stated that he speaks on behalf of the Jewish community; it deplored the fact that Galganov's political activities were being linked to his being Jewish.

Some 15 years ago, a colleague and I were treated in a similar fashion by the newspaper Le Devoir, but we at least had written an article in an Israeli newspaper, relating the problematic future faced by Montreal Jews in the wake of the 1976 Parti Quebecois victory. Since Galganov has never stated that he speaks for or works on behalf of the Jewish community, one can only conclude that this episode illustrates some of the nastier strains of ethnocentrism, that may lurk beneath the surface of the nationalist movement in Quebec.

Re: The Kirshner File (Oct. 24).

In his article "A Play With a Message," Sheldon Kirshner writes that "a 7-year-old black boy was fatally run over by a station wagon bearing Rabbi Menachem Schneerson." Actually the Rebbe was in another car and not in the car which hit Gavin Cato.

The Sinai Campaign forty years ago

The lessons apply even today

By HAROLD M. WALLER

Last week marked the 40th anniversary of the Sinai Campaign in which Israel defeated the Egyptian army and gained control of the Sinai Peninsula, up to the edge of the Suez Canal. In a war that lasted a week, Israel demonstrated that only eight years after achieving independence, it was capable of fielding the most competent army in the Middle East and vanquishing the military forces of the largest and leading Arab state.

The swiftness of the victory helped to solidify the reputation of the Israel Defence Forces (IDF) on the international scene. But the Sinai Campaign also demonstrated the validity of one of the recurrent themes in Israel's diplomatic history: even decisive military superiority cannot necessarily be translated into political gains. Israel's struggle for security and peace has both a military and a political dimension, and both are integral. As we reflect on Israel's current political and strategic challenges, it is useful to take note of the lessons of its history, including those from the Sinai Campaign.

The context in which Israel felt compelled to make a pre-emptive strike against Egypt was far different from that in which Israel operates today. Israel, living within the 1949 armistice lines, faced a hostile Arab world on all fronts. The general position of the Arab countries led by Egypt was that the creation of Israel in 1948 had been a catastrophe for the Arabs, an error that has to be reversed. Calls for the destruction of the Jewish State were common. There was no peace process and no direct contact between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

In specific terms, Egypt, under its charismatic leader Gamal Abdel Nasser, had claimed a leadership role in the Arab world. Nasser viewed himself as a unifying force who would fulfil his country's destiny to lead an Arab nation whose interests transcended the national boundaries that had been drawn by the Western powers after the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire. In addition to the struggle against imperialism, for which Nasser found allies among the non-aligned nations in the Third World, antipathy toward Israel was used by Nasser to unite the Arabs.

Thus, to some extent, Israel's fate was tied up in the internal relationships of the Arab world. Israel, which was very much isolated in its own region, sought out allies farther afield. A number of developments involving Egypt helped to create a situation in which Britain, France and Israel found that their interests were converging in the direction of an alliance aimed at Egypt.

Even though the three countries decided to cooperate, their reasons were very different. Israel focused very much on its own security. The combination of long-term strategic threats and immediate and frequent terrorist attacks launched from the Egyptian-occupied Gaza Strip by fedayeen provided then Israeli prime minister David Ben-Gurion with ample motivation to search for a way of dealing Egypt a severe blow. Nasser, who had come to power only in 1952 ousting a decrepit monarchy, strove to transform Egypt into a credible military threat, issued provocative calls for Israel's destruction and took concrete steps that affected vital Israeli national interests, particularly closing the Strait of Tiran (and thus Israel's only southern port, Eilat), first to Israeli shipping (1953), and then to all shipping bound for Israel (1955). Furthermore, his government actively encouraged the fedayeen attacks into Israel from the Gaza Strip that had caused hundreds of casualties.

Perhaps most importantly, the possibility that he might unite the notoriously fractious Arab world under his leadership was viewed ominously from Jerusalem, especially in light of the massive arms deal he concluded with Czechoslovakia in 1955 that was enabling the Egyptian military to modernize, close some of the qualitative gap between it and the IDF, and sharply increase the quantitative imbalance.

Israel certainly did not relish the prospect of fighting a general war on all fronts. Consequently by late 1955, Ben-Gurion, who had resumed the post of prime minister after two years in retirement, concluded that Israel had to at least consider a pre-emptive strike against Egypt.

Britain and France were also concerned about the rise of Nasser. As the former colonial powers in the region, they had continued to play an active role and had extensive economic interests in a period before the United States had become deeply involved in Middle Eastern affairs. The decisive moment for them came in July 1956, when Nasser announced to a cheering crowd in Alexandria that he was nationalizing the Suez Canal, wresting ownership from the British and raising concerns about the dependability of a vital commercial lifeline through which oil from the Persian Gulf was transported to Europe and about the ability of the major European powers to continue to exercise military and political influence east of Suez.

As a result of all these developments, the stage was set for Britain, France and Israel to launch what they thought was a carefully coordinated military operation that had two distinct dimensions: Israel, with British and French support, would defeat Egypt in Sinai, while Britain and France would use the Israeli-Egyptian fighting as a pretext for taking the Suez Canal back from Egypt.

Suffice it to say that while the Israeli side of the operation proved brilliantly successful in a military sense, the Suez aspect failed when the British and then the French backed down under severe international pressure.

Israel moved into the Sinai on Oct. 29, 1956, a few days before the U.S. presidential election and while the Soviet Union was brutally suppressing the Hungarian Revolution. In a series of operations that are still studied for their innovative planning and superb execution, the IDF cleaned out the Gaza Strip, drove through the Sinai Peninsula to the eastern bank of the Suez Canal and then turned south through the Mitla Pass and from Eilat to complete the expulsion of the Egyptian forces from Sinai, capture Sharm El-Sheikh and reopen the Strait of Tiran to Israeli and international shipping.

The Israeli forces moved with lightning speed, reaching the canal and finishing the campaign within 100 hours. The seeming ease of the Israeli victory, matched 11 years later in the Six Day War, created expectations about the Israel military that have not been duplicated since 1967 and are probably unrealistic. But the sight of Egyptian troops trudging thirstily and dejectedly through the desert amidst their abandoned tanks persisted as an image of Israeli military superiority.

The aftermath of the war, which ended when an exhausted British prime minister, Anthony Eden, decided to accept the cease-fire demand of the United Nations on Nov. 6, is instructive in terms of the possibilities and limits of Israeli policy. From the Israeli perspective, the role of the United States proved crucial. President Dwight D. Eisenhower reacted angrily to the Israeli and then the British-French invasions of Egypt, which occurred during the final week of his successful re-election campaign, threatening to end "friendly cooperation" with Israel. Essentially, his position and that of U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles was that Israel should withdraw to the 1949 armistice line, reflecting demands of the United Nations General Assembly.

Much of the period between the end of the war in early November and the eventual Israeli pullout in early March 1957 was devoted to diplomatic efforts by the United States and the UN to compel Israel to withdraw, even using sanctions if necessary, and Israeli efforts at first to hold on to some strategic territory and then, when that was perceived as beyond reach, at least to achieve some concrete security gains.

Ultimately Ben-Gurion felt that with UN forces in Gaza and at Sharm El-Sheikh complementing those already in Sinai for a few months, he had enhanced Israeli security tangibly. Hence on March 7, he reported to the Knesset that Israel had agreed to withdraw its troops and that UN forces would move into those key areas as buffers. To say the least, the four-month period from November to March put a strain on U.S.-Israeli relations.

Even though the United States had not yet become Israel's chief backer, a role that it assumed only after 1967, the bilateral relationship was already a complex one that was very important to Israel, especially because the United States was home to some six million Jews, the largest Diaspora community and one which was providing considerable economic help to the young state during the crucial early stage of its development. Eisenhower's threat to revoke the tax-deductible status of much of those funds was a potent weapon in his efforts to compel Israel to comply with his demands.

Israel did withdraw and the UN forces were brought in. But their efficacy did not withstand the 1967 crisis that led to the Six Day War, a development that convinced many Israelis that they could not leave their vital security interests in the hands of others. The failure of the international community, and especially the United States, to take action to reopen the Strait of Tiran when Nasser again closed it in May 1967, reinforced this view, which is certainly a factor in the attitudes of some Israelis toward the current peace process.

The most important lesson that can be derived from the Sinai Campaign and its aftermath is one that has been driven home frequently ever since: no matter how dominant Israel can be on the battlefield, it does not have the political clout to impose the conditions of peace. Therefore, in order to convert military victories into political gains, it must secure external support for its position.

The other conclusion that can be reached is that ultimately, military force, no matter how brilliantly employed, cannot alone resolve Israel's political problems with its Arab neighbors. Only political solutions can do that.

Shocking views in bible study

We are referred to as the People of the Book. But the "Book" is not an ordinary piece of literature. It is our Bible.

By Viva Press

I am not trying to state something new here, rather I am focusing on an already well known concept. The Hebrew Bible was not written with the expectation that its stories were providing a groundwork for another set of texts, the New Testament, to be written centuries later.

However, the Hebrew Bible is seen in just this way.

Typology is the study of the Old Testament as it is mediated through the New Testament. Everything that happens in the Old Testament is understood to be a foreshadowing of what is to come in the New Testament.

In Halifax, I am studying combined honors in English and Journalism. In one of my English classes, The Making of the English Bible, we are studying the Old and New Testaments as literary texts.

Not only am I faced with the complication that the Hebrew Bible serves primarily as the prelude to the New Testament, but I am also trying to focus on the Bible solely as literature.

In order to focus on the Bible as a literature, one has to try to disregard its religious content. This is very difficult, because the religious content is so central to the Bible, and is, in fact, the very stuff of the Bible.

And, as one may suspect, we always come back to the religious meanings of the stories we are studying.

I have been shocked at some of the things non-Jews think about the Jewish people and our ideologies.

When my class was reading the story of the Akedah, the sacrifice of Isaac at the hands of Abraham, and later, the account of the hardening of Pharaoh's heart in Egypt, it was pointed out that our God, the God of the Hebrew Bible, is mean-spirited and lacking in compassion. At first I was incensed by the student who said these negative things about the God I was taught to admire and love. However, the rest of the class quickly pitched in with passages from the Old Testament to substantiate her remarks.

"Unbelievable," was the first thing that came to my mind. Then, after the class was done giving proofs of this mean-spirited Old Testament Deity, I told them that our God is, in fact, not such a bad guy. God is our protector, the One who defined righteousness and justice.

One of the other things that took me by surprise was a further reference to the story of the sacrifice of Isaac. It was pointed out that "obviously" the Jewish people could not feel as close to God as Christians feel to Jesus, since God is feared by all. For it says in the Bible that Abraham, among others, feared God.

Whoa. Don't worry. I had my say in this matter — the vagaries of translation. Our "fear" of God, I emphasized, is not being afraid, but a form of respect, of awe. True, not everyone in my class agreed with the statement tnat we, the Jews, are afraid of God, rather than in awe. But they didn't speak up for that opposing point of view. So, I did.

Studying the Bible as literature in an English course at university is very different from my 12 years of studying it at Hebrew day schools. A text with which I had developed a comfortable familiarity is being presented in an unfamiliar way. And this is disquieting for me. I have to adjust to a whole new way of interpretation.

On the other hand, the exploration of the structure of language and the imagery opens up new concepts for me. I find this diversity challenging.

Too few attempts to bridge the gap

One year after the tragic assassination of Yitzhak Rabin, I sat in a synagogue in north-west London and listened to a sermon by the chief rabbi of the United Kingdom, Rabbi Jonathan Sacks. His message was the same one I had read in the Jerusalem Post that very morning, and one that has resonated around the Jewish world on the anniversary of an event that turned international attention to the deep schisms that exist in Israeli and Jewish society.

By Ilan Gewurz

The call for tolerance among Jews and the development of a sense of national unity based on some form of shared identity, not necessarily a shared vision of the future, has been heard repeatedly.

A full year has passed since the assassination; a year since Jews around the world responded by calling for a process of serious soul searching in order to recreate some form of Jewish unity; a year since the need to address our political, religious and social differences through open dialogue was recognized as crucial for rebuilding a basis of common Jewish identity; a year since "unity without uniformity" became the catch phrase aimed at addressing the division that seemed to be undermining the very essence of the Jewish State and world Jewry.

Yet, here we are, a year later, and there has been little, if any, attempt to bridge the gaps which plague the Jewish people. In fact, the pressures stemming from issues such as the date for withdrawal from Hebron, the intensified Arab claim over Jerusalem and the response to the violence that occurred in September, have intensified the differences between groups. But the problem does not rest in the diversity of views, but in the uncompromising zealotry with which those views are manifested.

The failure to respond to the fractured Israeli community stems from a lack of understanding as to how such division can effectively be addressed. Thus repeating the call for Jewish pluralism without presenting a plan of what needs to be done will be no more effective now than it was a year ago.

Must understand society's schisms

In order to begin addressing the schisms that have emerged in society, we must first understand them. Disagreement over the definition of the State of Israel, the role of religion in the state, the preferred response to Arab-Israeli relations, go back to the very beginning of the modern Zionist movement.

In the past, however, the struggle to establish the State of Israel (though there may not have been a common vision of where exactly the state was headed) and later the fact that Israel was under "siege" by neighbors committed to her destruction, enabled Jews to put up a united front despite their great differences.

Today, the State of Israel is no longer merely responding to external threat, but has taken proactive steps to define its own future. The lack of an immediate external threat, combined with the need to take decisive action regarding the vision and future existence of the state, has provided an opportunity for Israelis to attempt to define themselves, and they are coming up with very different definitions.

On its own that is not necessarily negative. Diversity is an inherent value within pluralism and unity need not require uniformity. However, when these polarized views face a challenge that will fundamentally affect the future of both their existences, then their differences are no longer theoretical concepts that can be swept under the carpet of "national identity."

According to many scholars of nationalism, the very definition of a nation rests on the fact that even though most of its members will never know, meet or even hear of most of their fellow members, in the minds of each lies the image of their commonality. There is much that can be done to build or strengthen that sense of commonality. However, the task is all that much more difficult when the nation is faced with challenges that accentuate the divisions.

Many leaders, including Rabbi Sacks, have correctly pointed out that while we may not agree on an end, we must at least agree on the means by which to resolve the issues. What needs to be strengthened is the commitment to the democratic process. However, the task of teaching democracy is much more difficult when the zealotry of the parties involved leaves them viewing their counterparts as illegitimately making national decisions. It is no wonder there has been little success over the course of the last year. We don't even know where to begin, but clearly we need more than a mere call for national unity.

The Shahak Affair

Recently Tom Harpur has written letters in the Toronto Star, informing the readers that Jewish law forbids saving the life of a non-Jew on Shabbat.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

His authority was a Dr. Israel Shahak who, in December 1965, had written an article in the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz to that effect.

Subsequently, in the Orthodox journal Tradition (Summer, 1966), the then spiritual leader of the Fifth Avenue Synagogue in New York, Rabbi Immanuel Jakobovits, devoted a lengthy, well documented article to the issue. (He later on served as chief rabbi of Great Britain.)

Here are some excerpts from the rabbi's article:

"To quote ... this inflammatory charge, he [Shahak] subsequently 'revealed' that he witnessed an incident in which an Orthodox Jew had refused to allow his telephone to be used to call for help for a non-Jew who had collapsed nearby. Shocked, he asked the rabbinate for a ruling and they had, so he claimed, confirmed that the Sabbath could indeed be violated only to save a Jewish life.

"These 'revelations' aroused a storm of public indignation in Israel and throughout the Jewish world. Editorials, suitably embellishing the story, fumed against the 'medievalism' and the 'utter absurdity and inhumanity' of the rabbis.

"In all the excitement, it was almost overlooked that Dr. Shahak, when challenged to substantiate his personal 'testimony,' was eventually forced to admit that the Orthodox Jew he had 'witnessed' refusing use of his telephone simply did not exist. The whole incident had been fabricated in true Protocols [of the Elders of Zion] style.

"Equally overlooked was the circumstance that the rabbinate, far from having confirmed Dr. Shahak's allegation, had in fact ruled that the Sabbath must be violated to save non-Jewish no less than Jewish lives."

In discussing the issue, Rabbi Jakobovits quotes a lengthy responsum by the Ashkenazi chief rabbi of Israel, Rabbi Isaac J. Unterman, who, using the method and technique of halachic discussion comes to the abovementioned clear conclusion. Says Rabbi Jakobovits:

"We have here, then, a classic example of rabbinical endeavors to adjust the Halachah, within the framework of its own rules, to the exigencies of the times or indeed to the demands of ethical probity. The stringent rules of the Talmud and the Shulchan Aruch, however logically sound in themselves, did not deter the rabbis from introducing modifications by using their halachic ingenuity, reinforced by their lofty concept of Torah ethics, to explain, if not justify the practice of Jewish physicians in violating the Sabbath for non-Jewish as well as Jewish patients."

So why did Shahak, who is no authority in the matter, go against well-established literature? asks Rabbi Jakobovits. He answers: "The only explanation one can find for this outburst of unreason is that evidently anti-religious Jewish fanaticism is no less irrational than anti-Semitism itself."

The Kirshner File

How can Jews live in Germany?

The question, painful in its broader implications, comes up repeatedly: How can Jews possibly live in Germany after the infamy of the Third Reich and the Holocaust?

By Sheldon Kirshner

And as the 58th anniversary of Kristallnacht on Nov. 9 approaches, this query takes on a special poignancy.

But to Michal Bodemann, the 52-year-old Austrian-born editor of Jews, Germans and Memory: Reconstructions of Jewish Life in Germany (University of Michigan Press, $54.50 US), the question, while valid, is besides the point in practical terms.

The Jewish community in Germany has doubled in size in the past decade, from 30,000 to 58,000 registered Jews, and continues to grow, observes Bodemann, a professor of sociology at the University of Toronto.

Indeed, he adds in an interview, there are a number of towns and cities whose Jewish population is actually larger than it was prior to 1933, the seminal year in which the Nazis seized power.

And the old notion that Jews in Germany are "sitting on their suitcases," anxiously waiting to leave, is virtually passe among the younger generation, he says.

"They have it good in Germany. It is a comfortable environment. They're at home in Germany."

As a result, unlike their parents or grandparents, more and more Jews in their 20s consider themselves "German Jews" instead of "Jews in Germany," a distinction Bodemann regards as crucially important with respect to their identity.

According to Bodemann, young Russian Jewish immigrants who've settled in Germany in the past few years are of the same mindset. Conditioned to view the Soviet gulag system, rather than Auschwitz, as the epitome of evil, and increasingly at ease in their new homes, their adaptation to Germany has gone relatively well.

Bodemann, who commutes between Canada and Germany quite regularly, conceived the idea for Jews, Germans, Memory after organizing a 1989 conference at the University of Toronto entitled How Can Jews Live in Germany Today?

The book, one of the few in English which treats the topic so thoroughly, consists of 13 essays, two by Bodemann himself.

There are no plans at present for a German edition. But Bodemann's articles have been published, in German, under the title of Theatre of Memory: The Jewish Community and its German Invention. The volume was judged one of the 10 best non-fictional works in Germany this year.

One of the finest essays in Jews, Germans, Memory is by Micha Brumlik, a professor of education at the University of Heidelberg, who assesses the past, present and future of the Jewish community.

Brumlik points out that, until recently, the core of the post-war community was made up primarily of Polish emigres and their offspring, augmented by influxes from Romania, Hungary, the former Czechoslovakia and Israel.

In turn, these groups have been joined by pension-aged German Jews who've returned to take advantage of Germany's material security.

And since the late 1980s, the community has been bolstered by an inflow of Jews from what was once the Soviet Union. In Brumlik's judgment, Soviet immigrants will soon constitute more than half of all registered Jews in the country. (Bodemann claims that there are 42,000 non-registered Jews in Germany today.)

The biggest communities are in the western sector: Berlin, Frankfurt, Munich, Hamburg, Cologne and Dusseldorf. In Brumlik's estimation, smaller communities are nearing their end.

Brumlik raises an interesting issue. With the exception of some mayors, there is no evidence that prominent German politicians sought the return of Jews who emigrated under duress. "This failure," he writes, "illustrates the fact that, intentionally or not, (West Germany) accepted in principle the (Nazi) policy of expelling Jews."

What's more, the first post-war German governments did not voluntarily pay war reparations Concessions had to be wrung from them by Jewish organizations.

Michael Brenner, an associate professor of modern Jewish history at Brandeis University, writes in his essay that German and East European survivors in post-war Germany were divided by one major conundrum: to stay or to go?

Jewish displaced persons organizations regarded their sojurn on German soil as temporary, while German-Jewish associations expressed a willingness to contribute to the building of a new Germany with democratic structures.

By 1950, the vast majority of East European Jewish refugees had left, leaving behind around 15,000 DPs who remained for a variety of reasons: sickness, weakness, economic success or marriage to German spouses.

In his essay, Frank Stern, a Tel Aviv University historian, delves into the nature of contemporary German-Jewish relations.

Jews in Germany are "living witnesses" to a dark past and, therefore, are sometimes reproached as "disturbers" of the peace. (Brumlik, similarly, takes note of a "new anti-Semitism" which sees in Jews "a living memorial for the greatest disgrace of German history.")

Stern also analyses the phenomenon of philo-Semitism, the high tide of which occurred in the first two decades following the war.

Philo-Semitic stereotypes, he explains, were accompanied by a "totally exaggerated public image of Israel." On a pragmatic level, philo-Semitism was "an instrument for the moral and political integration of West Germany into the West, a salient factor of foreign policy."

Bodemann, in his second essay, contends that the combination of German unification in 1990 and the concomitant increase of neo-Nazi violence have altered the role of Jews in German society.

In allying themselves with Germans who condemn violence against foreigners, Jews have placed Kristallnacht "in the past perfect" and have fudged their status as "principal victims."

The position of Jews in East Germany, which was absorbed by West Germany, remains an intriguing subject.

In explaining why Jews settled in East Germany, John Borneman — a professor of anthropology at Cornell University — comments that most of the returnees were highly motivated Jewish anti-fascists who identified themselves more strongly as Communists and members of the German left than as Jews.

And in many cases, timely considerations — job offers, McCarthyism in the United States, Stalinism in the Soviet Union and deep ties to German language and culture — were determining factors.

In her essay, Robin Ostow — a resident fellow at the University of Toronto's Centre for Russian and East European Studies — singles out two "incisive moments" of Jewish history in East Germany, a nation which never had more than several hundred registered Jews.

Like nearly all the other essays in Jews, Germans, Memory, it is cogent, well researched, serious in tone and a valued contribution to German and Jewish historiography.

Too easy to believe stereotypes

By JOSH LAMBERT

Most of the prejudicial attitudes prevalent in society do not begin with calculating racists, but are the overflow of the accepted racial discrimination of earlier decades. These attitudes manifest themselves in ethnic stereotyping and mistrust. It is all too easy to believe the stereotypes and rumors we hear about cultures of which we are ignorant. But this seemingly innocent behavior leads inevitably to intolerance and to full-blown racism.

Opponents of multiculturalism fail to understand that there are compelling and important reasons for civility between the social groups in our multicultural community and for genuine friendship. Because of the changing world, cultural and ethnic isolationism is no longer possible or desirable. Like it or not, all races are now in one community — local, national or global. One need look no further than a downtown streetcar or a busy bank lineup to see the proof.

We Jews should especially realize how dangerous is even the slightest ill-will between cultural groups. After all, how long did it take for the stereotype of Jews as rich and miserly moneylenders in Europe to beget the infamous and forever troubling Protocols of the Elders of Zion?

We know how easily society can lapse into hatred and racial discrimination, just as it did in Russia in the early 20th century as a result of the Protocols. This message is especially important in our times, when we are in constant, if sometimes superficial, contact with a great number of racial, ethnic and cultural groups.

Society must recognize that political discrimination against any culture or ethnic group is an offense and a danger to every single person, as it infringes on each individual's most precious and esteemed right: individuality. It is the duty of each cultural and ethnic group to teach this message to its members and to the rest of society. As Jews, we must champion the rights of every other cultural and ethnic group, or else, to paraphrase the famous Holocaust poem, when the racists come for us, there will be no one left to object.

We have a particular obligation to fight racial and ethnic discrimination not only by denouncing racists, but also by fostering goodwill and understanding among the different cultural and ethnic groups. We know, possibly more than any group, the results of ignorance and racial intolerance. We understand intimately the paranoia that racial, cultural and ethnic groups understandably feel. Because of this, we are obligated to go out of our way to create a society in which each person, regardless of origin, can live and worship safely and freely.

Perhaps the most important reason that ethnic groups should maintain good relations with other groups can be best expressed within the metaphor on which Canada's multicultural policy is based. The beauty of a mosaic is not in the individual tiles, nor in their colors, but in the strategic and esthetic placement of the tiles next to contrasting tiles to form a picture.

When the different colored tiles are mixed artistically, we begin to see a formidable piece of art that seems to constantly change and renew itself. No matter how strong the group is, or how bright the individual tile, it improves itself and thus the whole society by mixing with others, exchanging ideas and interacting freely. The many groups infuse the general culture with the creativity of hundreds of homelands and histories. They exchange skills and improve the proficiency of our industries. They show their true individual beauties as a part of a unified whole.

To us as individuals, the task of weaving the ethnic and cultural groups of our society into a coherent fabric seems daunting. The easier alternative is to succumb to the perceived safety of our own group and to shun the other groups, to ignore our duty and to let intolerance creep slowly and stealthily into our consciousness. However, we, as citizens and as Jews, must realize the dangers of this apathy. We must pursue good relations consciously and willingly. The possibility of a united society free of hate and mistrust is awesome. In this spirit, we can be optimistic about our future: a future of cultural and ethnic exchange, a future of free communication and expression, and a future of safety and justice for all.

Josh Lambert is in Grade 12 at the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto. This article is excerpted from the winning essay in a contest sponsored by the friends of the late Judge Walter Tarnopolsky.

The contest was open to all Jewish students in Toronto of high school age. Entrants were asked to write on why it is important for ethnic communities generally, and the Jewish community in particular, to maintain good relations with other ethnic and cultural groups.

Shattered Dreams

To think of it now
It's like a century away
But my heart is still wounded
As if it happened yesterday.

A childhood I lived
Innocent and clean
When a brutal force marched in
And shattered my dream.

The skys turned grey
The days turned black
As I watched in horror
My people face death.

Ravaged by wars
Oppressed by tyrants
The heavens kept watching
The world kept silent.

But the show must go on
The music plays again
And the child of the holocaust
Is now an old man.

Is to hope and to pray
That peace and justice
Shall always prevail.

Judith the strategist

By RACHAEL TURKIENICZ

Chanukah is rapidly approaching and families are preparing their menorahs for the eight days of candlelighting. The miracle of Chanukah is in fact two-fold.

The Temple was desecrated by the Assyrians and when the Hasmoneans rededicated the building, they could find oil to light the Temple lamp for only one day. Preparing new oil was an eight-day venture, and therefore the lamp would remain unlit for seven days. Since the Temple lamp was to be lit at all times, this presented a religious dilemma.

Miraculously, the oil which should only have lasted one day stayed lit for eight full days until new oil was available. Most of us remember learning of this miracle at one time or another.

However, the second miracle of Chanukah is equally important. It is the military victory. The Israelites were badly outnumbered and their weaponry was far inferior to that of their enemies. And yet, the mighty were handed over into the hands of the few and the Israelites emerged victorious.

Both miracles are crucial, since without the victory in battle, we could not have regained access to the Temple. We know that Judah the Maccabee led the rededication of the Temple, but interestingly, the Talmud attributes the military aspect of the holiday to a woman — Judith.

Judith, an Israelite woman, fashions a strategy that allows her entry into the enemy camp. She gains access to the commanding officer through her femininity, suggesting a private audience. Once alone with him, she seizes upon this rare opportunity.

Judith is able to kill the officer, leaving his troops without strong leadership and it is this advantage that allows the Israelite army to conquer their enemy and gain independence.

One could say the Israelites had two leaders at that time: Judah the Maccabee was the public leader who united the troops; Judith was the leader behind the scenes whose contribution was equally necessary.

A true leader, Judith uses all aspects of her identity to her advantage. She understands that the enemy will not perceive her as a threat, since she is a woman, and she feeds this belief. However, once she gains the advantage, she does not back away from aggressively completing her mission.

Not only are there two leaders, but Judah and Judith are identical names — one reflects the male and one reflects the female. Interestingly, the military aspect of the holiday is attributed to a woman, while the job of "cleaning" the Temple is attributed to a man. Perhaps the holiday is more complex than is first imagined.

The Talmud openly attributes the military advantage to Judith, and through her, obliges women to light the Chanukah candles. In fact, it is traditional in many households that the woman refrain from work while the Chanukah candles are burning. Although today our traditions maintain the echo of Judith, she herself has unfortunately faded from the forefront of our celebrations.

Perhaps while reciting the miracles of Chanukah as we stand around our menorahs, we should find a moment to thank this extraordinary leader.

Internet genealogy

By MARK MIETKIEWICZ

As we continue reading through the book of Bereshit, we are given quite a clear record of the births and deaths of the personalities of the Bible. Thousands of years later, there is little doubt who begat whom.

Our extended family trees, however, are rarely that clear.

That's why it's ironic that one of the best tools to investigate our history is one of the most modern – the Internet. With a bit of research and luck, you may be able to shed new light on your family history. In this week's column, I will look at some of the main Jewish and general sites on the Internet dealing with genealogy.

The grandfather of all sites is JewishGen: Your Guide to Jewish Genealogical Research [http://www.jewishgen.org/]. Before wading through this impressive and massive site, go to the JewishGen FAQ (Frequently Asked Questions) [http://www.jewishgen.org/faqinfo.html]. This large document is an excellent introduction with sections on Jewish Genealogical Societies, Seminars on Jewish Genealogy, National and Regional Archives, Ship Passenger Lists, Yizkor Books, Holocaust Research and more.

Also check out the JewishGen Family Finder, "a computer-indexed compilation of surnames and towns currently being researched by over 2,600 Jewish genealogists worldwide...with over 32,000 entries." [http://www.jewishgen.org/jgff.html] And if you don't find your family name or ancestral town on the list, add it. [http://www.jewishgen.org/jgffsys.html]

Another excellent site is run by Avotaynu Inc. [http://www.avotaynu.com], "the largest publisher of information and products of interest to persons researching their Jewish family history."

Other large sites are operated by the Jewish Genealogical Society of Rochester, N.Y., [http://rochester.hq.net/jgsr/] and the Dallas Virtual Jewish Community Centre Genealogy Home Page [http://www.ncc.com/dvjcc/dvjcc.genealogy.html]. The Association of Jewish Genealogical Societies [http://www.jewishgen.org/ajgs/] is the umbrella organization for 60 local Jewish genealogical societies around the world from Azerbaijan to the United States.

Looking for your family's roots can be more than a mere curiosity. It can be crucial when trying to identify a genetic disorder. In fact the Ultimate Jewish/Israel Link Launcher [http://ucsu.colorado.edu/~jsu/history.html#genes] not only has links to some of the more common Jewish genealogical sites, it also lists links to genetic diseases which are more common among Jews such as Tay Sachs disease, Gaucher disease, Familial Mediterranean fever and others.

Your hunt for information shouldn't be limited to Jewish sites. The Genealogy Home Page [http://www.genhomepage.com/] has links to worldwide libraries, genealogy societies, information about genealogy software and more, as does the genealogy page prepared by Yahoo! Internet Life Magazine at [http://www.zdnet.com/yil/content/growth/history/gene1.html].

Also, take a look at FEEFHS, the Federation of East European Family History Societies [http://www.dcn.davis.ca.us/go/feefhs/]. Using the FEEFHS search engine, I discovered that Ignacy Mietkiewicz of Waterbury, Conn., was one of "an estimated 20,000 Polish immigrants to America who answered the call to fight for freedom and the opportunity to regain Poland's independence during World War I." (I've never heard about an Ignacy Mietkiewicz so I guess I have some research to do.)

If you've looked through these sites and you still haven't found out anything about your own ancestry, there's still hope. In my next column we will look at Jewish genealogy courses you can take online, Jewish genealogy newsgroups (Usenet) and electronic mailing lists.

Don't despair. SOMEBODY must have heard about your bubbee's zayde.

Toronto's aliyah shaliach returns to Israel

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In the three years Udi Savion spent as Toronto's aliyah shaliach, his office helped some 650 people move to Israel.

But in an interview at the Israel Aliyah Centre before his recent return to his Binyamina home, Savion, 46, suggested that perhaps a more important achievement during his term here was his outreach to Toronto's Jewish community.

A farewell reception for Savion and his wife Tami, who co-produced the play Our Jerusalem earlier this year, brought together representatives of a variety of Jewish organizations including B'nai Brith Canada, the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto (UJA Federation) and the Jewish National Fund.

Savion, a retired navy commander who will work as a project manager in the construction field on his return, is especially pleased about his relationship with UJA Federation: he is the first aliyah shaliach to have had an office at the Lipa Green Building.

The federation provided him with the space one day a week "so he could have a broader community profile," said Allan Reitzes, UJA Federation executive director. "Udi was an ambassador for Israel. He's a good guy. He really cares."

The Toronto Jewish community has been supportive of aliyah, Reitzes added, referring in part to past collaboration between the federation and Savion's predecessors.

Savion saw his outreach work as a tool for preventing assimilation — "like planting seeds for the future."

For those who had decided to move to Israel, among them a substantial number of young sabras, Savion served as facilitator. (Miri Gur, his assistant for the past 14 months, is the new aliyah shlichah.)

The role of aliyah shaliach includes ensuring that prospective olim have realistic expectations, as well as helping with myriad logistical details, Savion explained.

Udi and Tami Savion were presented with UJA/Federation t-shirts at their farewell reception. [Frances Kraft photo]

During his stay here, he saw an increase in the number of young singles making aliyah. Most of them "are looking for two things: job opportunities and social life. In Israel, unemployment is very low — six percent, and the social life is very warm. Tel Aviv offers night life and day life, 24 hours a day."

Sure there are problems in Israel, Savion acknowledged, but he believes the advantages outweigh them.

To his surprise, though, he has come to believe that Toronto can teach Israel a thing or two in the field of Jewish education. "There is a saying that if you're Israeli, there is no threat to your future as a Jew. I'm secular, and I thought like that before."

Three of Savion's four children, who attended day school here (Bialik Hebrew Day School and the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto), as well as Savion himself, learned much about their Jewish heritage in Toronto, he said.

An increased emphasis on Jewish education, Jewish values and Jewish roots in Israel, he believes, would help minimize the gap between secular and religious Israelis.

High school students take part in mitzvah campaign

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The high school students who participated in the recent mitzvah campaign came from diverse Jewish backgrounds, but they all shared a common interest in gemilat chesed (acts of loving-kindness).

The mitzvah campaign, a pilot project sponsored by the Board of Jewish Education (BJE) and UJA-Federation, drew some 80 students from Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT) and the B'nei Akiva Schools — Ulpanat Orot and Or Chaim.

They volunteered in chesed projects organized by community service agencies that included Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care, the Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC) and Senior Care. Activities ranged from friendly visiting with seniors to setting up a library at the new Mizrachi office.

The goal of the mitzvah campaign was to provide service to the community and motivate high school students to become more active in volunteer work, said Joyce Levine, the BJE's coordinator of school services.

"From my point of view, the mitzvah campaign was a success. The students felt they made a valuable contribution and those receiving the services were pleased as well," Levine said.

Rabbi Moshe Yeres, a rosh yeshivah at B'nei Akiva, said that Grade 9 and OAC students from Or Chaim were required to participate in the mitzvah campaign.

"We were using this program as a kick-off ... to create a [chesed] program for them [the students]."

He said he would have liked to involve all 70 Or Chaim students in the mitzvah campaign, but logistically it was only possible to send the youngest and oldest.

He stressed that the boys need to be sensitized to the importance of chesed. "The world was built on these pillars: Torah, avodah and gemilut chasadim. The third pillar gets skipped over [at school]."

Program supports three ideals

Or Chaim is instituting a chesed program because it is necessary "to support all three ideals equally," he said.

Rabbi Yeres noted that Ulpanat Orot has a chesed program run through Jewish Family & Child Service (JF&CS).

Geraldine Bitton is an OAC student who sits on the chesed committee at that school. She and about 10 other students helped at a crafts program to integrate young Russian children with students from the elementary day schools. The program was run by the BJE in conjunction with the Community Integration Program at the BJC.

Approximately half the students involved in the mitzvah campaign were from CHAT, which this year instituted a chesed program for all Grade 9 students.

"It's appropriate educational training," said Gary Levine, CHAT's director of student activities. "The Grade 9 program is a first step in initiating a school-wide program."

While their participation was not mandatory, Grade 9 students could apply their volunteer time from the mitzvah campaign to the hours of community service they are required to do. However, at least half of the mitzvah campaign paricipants from CHAT were upper-grade students who are not required to do community service.

Alex Kojfman, 17, a Grade 12 student said he came as a representative of the CHAT student council of which he's the president, and because he believes volunteering is a worthwhile activity.

UJA Federation Washington Fly-In

Standing room only

Exhausted but exhilarated, 175 UJA Federation supporters recently took on Washington, during a dizzying day of briefings and tours.

A capacity crowd participated in this year's Washington Fly-In, a popular annual event, chaired by Lorri Kushnir and Harold Lederman. Twelve university students recruited by Jewish Campus Services also joined the group.

The 16 hour trip included stops at the new $100 million Canadian Embassy, the Israeli Embassy, the Holocaust Museum, the Pentagon, Capitol Hill and the Washington Institute for Near East Policy.

The roster of speakers featured:

- Canada's Ambassador to the United States Raymond Chretien
- Michael Berenbaum, Director of the United States Holocaust Research Institute
- Shoshana Bryen, Special Projects Director, Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs
- Syndicated columnist Steven Roberts
- Danny Sebright, head of the Pentagon's Israel desk
- Robert Satloff, Executive Director, The Washington Institute for Near East Policy
- Shlomo Gur, Deputy Head of Mission at the Israeli Embassy

Photographer Mark Grenville captured the flavour of the Fly-In through these shots.

Fight to the finish on Helms Burton bill

Canada's Ambassador to the United States, Raymond Chretien, is uncompromising about American legislation banning Canadian companies from doing business in Cuba.

Canadian Ambassador Raymond Chretien.

"The Americans have made a huge mistake," claimed Chretien, during a dialogue with UJA Federation Fly-In participants.

Chretien called the Helms Burton Act "the most visible of irritants" between Canada and the United States and he promised to fight Helms Burton "every step of the way."

The Ambassador attributed President Clinton's support for the bill to domestic politics during an election campaign, pointing out that Clinton opposed the measure before Cuba downed an American plane earlier this year. "Now," continued Chretien, "he's stuck with it."

The U.S. election, he said, has obligated Clinton to continue backing Helms Burton, which has set off a storm of protest in Canada and across Europe. "In New Jersey and Florida, it's very difficult to talk about Cuba in rational terms," he noted.

Despite the anti-Cuba legislation, Chretien's assessment of Canada-U.S. relations was generally positive. Business, between the two countries, he observed, has increased by 17% since passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement and "irritants represent less than 1% of our trade."

Middle East briefings highlight Fly-In

Experts cite caution signs

If the Middle East peace process avoids spinning into reverse, Robert Satloff will be satisfied.

Satloff, Executive Director of the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, one of the most distinguished think tanks in the United States, believes the biggest challenge for President Clinton is to "maintain achievements already made."

He told UJA Federation Fly-In participants that many Israelis have lost their faith in the Oslo Accords after Palestinian police fired on Israeli soldiers during recent violence. "The divide between Israelis and Palestinians is wider today than it's been since the signing on the White House lawn," he said.

Shoshana Bryen believes the Palestinians have not honoured the Oslo Accords.

According to Satloff, Arafat learned a lesson from the Palestinian police exchange with Israel. "He saw into the abyss that the process could collapse completely. Everything he had could be lost."

Although Satloff acknowledged the assessment by some senior Israeli military personnel of a possible war with Syria, he rated the danger of war as only 15-20%.

The U.S., however, is worried about Syrian chemical weapons development, which is, according to a Pentagon official, "growing, robust and vital." Syria, said Shoshana Bryen, from the Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs, purchased some of its chemical weapons inventory from French President Jacques Chirac, whom she described as an "arms merchant" before entering the political arena.

UJA Federation Campaign '97

NEW CONTRIBUTOR COUNT QUICKLY RISING

Nearly 800 first time contributors have now come forward, adding over a quarter of a million dollars to UJA Federation's campaign total. More than $27 million dollars has been raised so far.

Last week at the official launch of the new gifts drive, Campaign Chairman David Goldstein said UJA Federation's objective is to attract 3,000 new contributors this year and an additional 2,000 by the end of the Three Year Vision.

"Everyday we're getting closer to our goal," said Goldstein who applauded recent outreach efforts to new contributors, which include programs, telethons and parlour meetings.

Launch Chairman Abe Glowinsky, clad in hospital operating room scrubs, used medical analogies to describe the inauguration of the new gifts initiative. "Tonight," said Glowinsky, "is about celebrating new beginnings, new relationships and new possibilities, just as we celebrate the arrival of a newborn."

The evening's guest speaker, Israel expert Shira Herzog, spoke about increasing divisiveness within Israeli society at a time when Israel is the region's strongest power. "Israel's common bond can no longer be solely determined by an external threat," she observed.

A new series of new gifts telethons ran from Sunday, November 3 to Wednesday, November 7.

Community Partners

Attached to community from the fringes

Even though Albert (Ubby) Krakauer's Unionville address situates him beyond the Jewish community core, he remains connected to his Jewish identity through UJA Federation.

Krakauer, a senior executive vice-president at Shoppers Drug Mart, actually grew up in the city's downtown core where he spent many afternoons and Sundays at the Bloor YMHA.

But it wasn't until after graduating as a pharmacist and moving to Etobicoke in 1959 that he began to look for ways of expressing his Jewishness.

"When I had my first child," recalls Krakauer, "it got me thinking about the importance of Jewish identity. Living in Etobicoke meant I had to search for ways of connecting with other Jews."

That's when Krakauer and his family joined the Western Suburban Jewish Community. "It allowed us to keep in touch with 50 or so other Jewish families who lived in the area."

In 1980, Krakauer moved to Unionville and continued to support UJA Federation's campaign. A few years ago, Bernie Ceifets, Chair of UJA Federation's Pharmacy division, invited his colleague to play a larger role within the organization.

Albert (Ubby) Krakauer

"Bernie asked me if I could help canvass and I said 'yes.' Knowing a lot of people within my field, makes it easy."

Krakauer says there's no mystery to why he receives many positive responses. "I simply relay the facts about how UJA Federation helps people in need."

"As a Jew who considers himself fortunate, I feel that I have an obligation to help those who need it. It's a mitzva."

Krakauer also gave his two eldest children, now in the work force, a head start by making a pledge to UJA Federation on their behalf. "I wanted to set them on the right track."

קאַנסטו געפינען צוויישן די ביכער אויך אַ יידישן בוך?
אַ יידיש בוך וואָס עפנט זיך פון רעכטן זייט טאָווול,
ליגט ער ניט ערגעץ אין אַ ווינקל ווי אַ פּאַר'יתומטער אבל?"

Israel experience on display

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The Promenade Mall in Thornhill was the place to be last Sunday for people seeking an Israeli experience for themselves or their children.

The Israeli Fair at the mall, offered one-stop shopping for information on a host of Israeli youth, volunteer and educational programs. Now in its third year, the fair is sponsored by the Israeli experience committee of UJA Federation.

Committee coordinator Karen Worb said this year's fair attracted some 500 people, a record attendance for the event, which was previously held at the Leah Posluns Theatre.

The music of local singer Kim Doron, who sang familiar Israeli tunes, set a festive mood that drew shoppers of all ages to the exhibit, Worb said.

Many of the exhibitors felt that having the fair in a public place like the Promenade increased the exposure of their organizations. About 20 programs geared to providing some aspect of the Israel experience were represented.

Participating organizations included Hebrew, Bar-Ilan, Ben-Gurion and Tel Aviv universities; and youth groups such as Hashomer Hatzair, Canadian Young Judaea, Hobonim Dror and Betar Tagar.

Elizabeth Sokolsky, national executive director of the Canadian Israel Experience Centre, based at the Lipa Green Building, said that exhibiting at the mall was an opportunity to reach many unaffiliated people who visited the fair because it was so accessible.

Ryan Hass, the new shaliach for Canadian Young Judaea — he arrived in Canada just last month — was surprised to see the Israel fair in a mall.

"I'm originally from England. To have a Jewish event in a public place with Israeli flags and Hebrew music is fantastic. I never experienced such a thing in England," he said.

Michael Litvack, academic affairs coordinator for Canadian Friends of Hebrew University, said he was pleased by the number of teenagers who visited his booth.

"We saw a lot of high school students, which was ideal." He noted that 150 Canadian students utilized a variety of Hebrew and English undergraduate and graduate programs last year.

The youth movement Betar Tagar showcased its new Internet Web site, which is slated to become part of the World Wide Web this month. Shaliach Pini Raviv holding up a box of applications for people interested in programs offered by his organization said he was pleased with the community response.

So was Yehuda Marie, shaliach for Hashomer Hatzair, another youth organization. He said many people visited the booth, which was a nice change for him. He usually has to go out to different Jewish venues to promote Hashomer Hatzair, but at the fair people came to him, he added.

Author documents Transnistria tragedy

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — As a generally unassuming woman, Felicia Carmelly is not easily given to overstatement. But as a psychologist, she knows that what has happened to her has been nothing less than cathartic.

Like many Holocaust survivors, Carmelly, 65, bottled up her terrible memories for decades, refusing to speak about her experiences, even to her family. Then, in 1994, she opened up a tiny crack, writing an article in The CJN on Transnistria, an obscure and largely forgotten place where her youth was robbed, and where over 400,000 Romanian and Ukrainian Jews were murdered, or beaten, worked or starved to death.

The reaction to The CJN article was so great that Carmelly set up, and has since led, the Transnistria Survivors' Association. She also, as she puts it, "took Transnistria out of the freezer with a veangance." For the next two years, she toiled at putting the whole tragedy on paper.

The result is a monumental achievement, especially for a non-historian. Carmelly's Shattered! 50 Years of Silence — Voices from Romania and Transnistria (Abbeyfield Publishing, $34.95) is a stunning and wrenching work, brimming with straight history, eyewitness testimonies from fellow survivors and long-lost documents. In all, it has broken ground in that it's probably the first comprehensive English-language history of Romania's war-time killing field.

"I don't know how I did it," sighs Carmelly. "It took so much out of me. It all hit me like a ton of bricks. But it was good for me to write because I got a lot out of my system."

The 536-page book was unveiled at the recent third annual haskarah (memorial service) for the Jews of Transnistria, attended by about 50 local survivors.

Dubbed the forgotten cemetery of Romanian Jewry, Transnistria was an artificially created 25,000-square kilometre region between the Dniester and Bug rivers in present-day Ukraine. In 1941, Romania's fascist dictator, Ion Antonescu, began expelling Jews across the Dniester River into Nazi-held Ukraine (thus the name Transnistria, which means "across the Dniester.") The Germans agreed the area could be used as a reservation for Jews.

Between 1941 and 1944, Transnistria became a dumping ground for Jews mainly from the eastern Romanian provinces of Bessarabia and Bukovina, and a virtual prison for the 150,000 Ukrainian and Russian Jews already there. In all, an estimated 330,000 Jews from across Romania were shipped to the region, with its 132 concentration, penal and transit camps, and countless forced labor sites and ghettos.

There is surprisingly little about Transnistria in the better-known Holocaust histories, and it has not become a household word. But one historian has called it "Romania's Auschwitz." In addition to ever-present hunger, disease and dread, Jews faced three malevolent forces: the SS, and local militias of Romanian and Ukrainian fascists.

Some 50,000 Jews were deported from the region to Siberia by the invading Red Army in 1944, and presumed to have died. In all, just 50,000 survived.

Among them were a young Carmelly (then Felicia Steigman), who'd been born in 1931 into a well-to-do family in Bukovina. When she was 10, she and her parents were shipped by train, along with hundreds of others, for three days and nights to a place called Ataki, in Bessarabia. From there, the Jews were forcibly marched to Shargorod in Transnistria, where Carmelly's family lived for 3½ years in a dirt-floor hut with no running water, beds, heating or toilets.

The men, including her father, were put to hard labor, while the women worked the fields. Carmelly and her mother knitted clothes as barter for food and wood. Her father, she recalls, "broke" as a result of forced work in the mass graves, including having to chop up small mountains of frozen corpses in the winter so the pieces could be buried.

Following liberation, Carmelly returned to Romania and in 1961, went to Israel. She came to Canada in 1963 and plunged into the study of psychology.

"I had completely wiped out every memory of Transnistria — until now," she says, sounding as through she has healed herself. "This book has been a cleansing experience."

The book is available through the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, 4600 Bathurst St., Willowdale, M2R 3V2.

Carmelly is to address a program on her book during Holocaust Education Week, on Nov. 14, 8 p.m. at Beth Habonim Congregation, 5 Glen Park Ave.

Divisions within community no joke: rabbi

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The notion of the Jews as G-d's chosen people could be a unifying force in the Jewish community, according to the rabbi/academic who founded the Union for Traditional Judaism.

Rabbi David Novak, 55, speaking to a capacity crowd in the chapel of Beth Tzedec Congregation on The Fractured Jewish People: What Can be Done?, explained that Israel, the Holocaust and religious observance, all of which have been proposed as bridges within the Jewish community, just haven't worked.

Rabbi Novak, who will leave his position as professor of Judaic Studies at the University of Virginia to become the University of Toronto's first chair of Jewish Studies this January, spoke as part of the Rabbi Stuart and Hadassa Rosenberg endowed annual memorial lecture series, part of the synagogue's adult education program.

Although differences among Jews have long been a basis for "all the delicious Jewish jokes about how Jews can't agree with one another," the jokes are over, the rabbi announced.

Last year's assassination of Yitzhak Rabin by a religious Jew "shook Jews to the very core ... In terms of our moral and spiritual condition, this is the lowest point that I can remember in my lifetime."

The rabbi then outlined some of the ways in which divisions within the Jewish community have been related to the State of Israel, the Holocaust and religious observance.

While it's "certainly better to have a state than not to have a state," Israel has been part of the problem, Rabbi Novak believes. He referred to both the distinctions between Israeli and Diaspora Jews and the increasingly pronounced differences between religious and secular Jews in Israel.

Rabbi Novak also sees the Holocaust as having contributed to distinctions within the Jewish community. As a fifth-generation American whose father-in-law's family was virtually wiped out in Europe, he has first-hand knowledge of such distinctions.

"Certainly our sorrow is a common experience, but the teaching of the Holocaust — and I don't question its necessity for a moment — also leads to divisions among Jews."

While the third suggestion (religious observance as a bridge among Jews) is gaining strength, especially with the growth of the baal tshuva movement, the strictly religious community has become "more separatist, more rejecting, more rigid and more suspicious," while "the resentment of non-observant Jews for observant Jews has grown." Even within Orthodoxy the divisions have become deeper, he noted.

Having been chosen by G-d "is a religious truth deeper than religious observance," Rabbi Novak said. "This is something we have to examine, ponder and think about. We have to go back to our deepest roots, deeper than Israel, deeper than the Shoah, even deeper than the commandments of the Torah. By understanding that nobody can be excluded, then there might be a chance for us to heal."

Eggleton wins committee debate

OTTAWA – In an old committee room on the third floor of the West Block on a rainy night in Ottawa last week, men in suits gathered before the Commons Foreign Affairs Committee to talk about the Canada-Israel Free Trade Agreement.

The pact was signed in Toronto on July 31, but it still needs Parliamentary approval in Canada (it doesn't in Israel) before it can go into effect Jan. 1 as planned.

Last month, the Liberal government rushed the agreement into the Commons and then over to the standing committee for clause by clause approval and through Parliament before too many people had time to raise a stink.

It's not that the free trade pact is a bad deal. On the contrary, everybody involved, Canadians, Israelis and Palestinians, all think it's great. Eliminating 20 percent tariffs on trade is a wonderful way to increase business and make potfuls of shekels and dollars – money for everybody concerned.

Right now Canada and Israel trade about $450 million a year, a 37 percent increase over last year. It could easily go to over $1 billion a year within two years after free trade.

So what's the problem? It's simply that some people believe the deal should be used as leverage against Israel regarding the situation of the Palestinian population in the territories. They want Canada to hold up implementation of the pact, and implement it only in stages as Israel moves closer to respecting the Oslo accords.

Representatives from the Canadian-Arab Federation, the National Council on Canada-Arab Relations and the Centre d'Etudes arabes de Montréal all took the stand to testify to that effect before the committee.

They repeatedly faulted Israel for occupying Palestinian lands, "stealing" water, bombing homes, and razing entire villages, building more roads into "settlements" and increasing "closures" of the West Bank and Gaza in violation of the Oslo accords.

They said that implementing the pact now would be seen by the world as a reward to Israel for its shoddy treatment of Palestinians.

Henri Rothschild of the Canada-Israel Research and Development Foundation and Shimon Fogel of the Canada-Israel Committee both defended the deal and urged that it be approved to help Israelis and Palestinians alike.

The star witness was Canada's International Trade Minister Art Eggleton who energetically defended the deal. It will restore a "level playing field" for Canadian businesspeople, who have been up against the free trade deal that the United States and the European Union have had with Israel for the past 10 years.

It's been so bad that some Canadian businesspeople have had their products manufactured in the United States just to take advantage of the duty-free U.S. deal with Israel – jobs lost to Canada.

Eggleton played down "injustices" to the Palestinians and emphasized instead business benefits to Canada.

And then Eggleton played his big card, which caught everybody by surprise. It was a letter from Israeli Trade Minister Natan Sharansky promising to offer Palestinians under the Palestinian Authority the same provisions contained in the Canada-Israel deal.

What does Yasser Arafat say about that, asked MPs from all three parties, as if they were all speaking with one voice?

Eggleton replied that Palestinian Authority officials had told Canadian diplomatic officials that anything that will help bolster the moribund Palestinian economy is okay by them.

Then and there Eggleton had won the debate.

The Canadian-Arab representatives who followed him tried to argue otherwise, but none of them had a letter from anybody in the Middle East opposing the deal.

Liberal MP Mark Assad, Senator Marcel Prud'homme, and former Liberal MP Ian Watson, of the Canadian-Arab Business Council, rushed out to try to locate the Palestinian Authority's representative in Canada, to find out what he thought. But they returned shortly afterwards, having failed to find him.

His absence was eloquent. If the Palestinian representative in Canada had not seen fit to testify before the committee, it said lots about the Palestinian Authority's position on the pact.

Outside the room, I asked Eggleton why he didn't have a letter from Arafat endorsing the deal.

"I guess he has lots of other things on his mind these days," chuckled Eggleton, trotting off down the corridor to his office.

Inside the room, the Canadian Arab representatives kept on explaining in detail for two hours all the "terrible things" being done to Palestinians.

They made it clear they are not against free trade with Israel, only against this particular deal at this particular time.

But it was to no avail. The MPs had already made up their minds.

The letter from Sharansky and the absence of any letter from the Middle East opposing the deal had sealed the day in committee.

It won't be so easy when it comes before the Senate for approval," vowed Senator Prud'homme. "You will see."

Christie gets space to speak at library

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VICTORIA — The Greater Victoria Public Library has been criticized by anti-racists for allowing a private meeting of the Canadian Free Speech League to be held in its main branch.

According to Michael Peters, former chair of the Capital Region Race Relations Council, the league "professes to believe in freedom of speech and uses that as a front to disseminate hate literature. It's unfortunate they made the municipality an unwilling partner."

The meeting was organized by the league and by lawyer Doug Christie, who told The CJN in a phone interview that since it is virtually impossible to hold a private meeting of the league, the library was asked for space.

Victoria Councillor Bob Friedland, the only Jewish member of Victoria Council, said in an interview that he will bring up the matter at a meeting of council and has instructed the city manager to "place on the agenda the issue of use of the library for Doug Christie's group ... A number of constituents have expressed grave concern regarding the library's actions in this regard."

Allan Dutton of the Canadian Anti-Racism Education and Research Society in Vancouver said he monitored the meeting. He said the municipality and City of Victoria should understand the importance of not providing access to groups that promote racist views and oppose immigration and multiculturalism.

There was no trouble at the meeting, Christie said. "No racism. One speaker was black."

Friedland pointed out in his memo to the Victoria city manager "that early in this council's term, council unanimously passed my motion prohibiting the City of Victoria from allowing the dissemination of racist material in any city facility." (The motion came after anti-Semitic material was distributed openly at city hall.)

But his motion doesn't cover the library, Friedland said, because it is a project of the Greater Victoria Regional District (GVRD). He wants the prohibition on racist material extended to all GVRD facilities.

Maurice Chazottes, chair of the library board, said in a phone interview, "I'm on the horns of a dilemma about the meeting because we have to respect democratic ideals."

He said he thinks the league broke library rental rules by not listing the names of the speakers in advance, as required, and by claiming to be a non-profit group, although a $10 fee per person was charged for admission.

Among those at the meeting were Tony McAleer, who operated a hate phone line in Vancouver until it was stopped by a Human Rights tribunal and the Federal Court of Canada, and columnist Doug Collins, who is facing a Human Rights complaint for an alleged anti-Semitic column on Schindler's List.

Vancouver Negev Dinner launched

VANCOUVER — The honoree at Vancouver's annual Negev Dinner will be Annette Rothstein, who, with her late husband Norman, has been a major supporter of the Jewish National Fund (JNF) and other community activities.

The Rothstein ties to Israel go back a long way, said Norman Gold, chair of the dinner planning committee.

Brig.-Gen. Yitzchak Fuchs, executive director of the JNF Pacific region, said proceeds from the Negev Dinner this year will be earmarked for Action Plan Negev, a five-year JNF program with the Jewish Agency and Israel's Ministry of Agriculture, to create rural employment "and foster economic stability in the Negev, the largest land reserve in Israel."

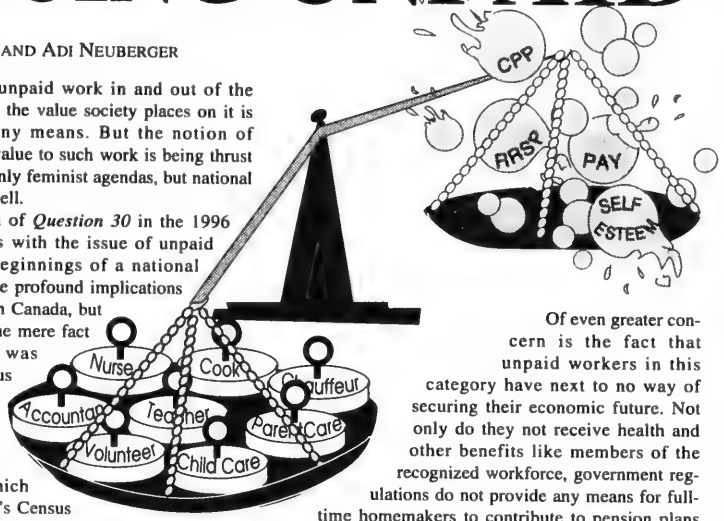
VALUING UNPAID WORK

BY PAM ROSMARIN AND ADI NEUBERGER

The issue of unpaid work in and out of the household, and the value society places on it is not new by any means. But the notion of assigning economic value to such work is being thrust into the fore of, not only feminist agendas, but national political agendas as well.

The introduction of Question 30 in the 1996 Census, which deals with the issue of unpaid work, signals the beginnings of a national debate that could have profound implications for women, not just in Canada, but all over the world. The mere fact that the question was included in the Census signifies a recognition that the issue is of rising social import.



The question which appeared on last May's Census reads as follows; "Last week how many hours did this person spend doing unpaid housework, yard work or home maintenance for members of this household...looking after one or more of this person's own children, or the children of others or providing unpaid care or assistance to one or more seniors?"

Ten federal agencies, five provinces, several university departments and numerous women's and social action groups lobbied relentlessly since the 1990 Census for the question on unpaid work to be included. In 1994 the National Action Committee on the Status of Women (NACSW) passed a resolution urging its members to boycott the 1996 Census if housework and childcare were not included.

For women's groups such as the Canadian Alliance for Home Managers and NACSW, the question's inclusion is a noteworthy victory.

Momentum began to build towards victory at the 1995 World Conference on Women in Beijing where there was agreement to recognize women's unremunerated contribution to the economy as well as to find better methods of measuring that contribution and to reflect it in official accounting systems of countries.

For years, women, who perform at least two thirds of unpaid chores according to a Statistics Canada limited survey, have been fighting to include the value of unpaid work in the country's total economic activity. The survey reported that in 1995 Canadians spent 25 billion hours a year on unpaid work worth $234 billion; $152.3 billion was performed by women. There's a strong impetus by women's groups to include this work in national accounting systems.

But enumeration and recognition are not the only battles being fought.

As MP Sheila Finestone points out, "Women returning to the workforce should have their unpaid work experience and household management skills recognized by the employer. Managing a household budget," explains Finestone, "can be compared to managing an office or even a government departmental budget." Both men and women need to recognize the skills involved in unpaid work.

Of even greater concern is the fact that unpaid workers in this category have next to no way of securing their economic future. Not only do they not receive health and other benefits like members of the recognized workforce, government regulations do not provide any means for full-time homemakers to contribute to pension plans or to RRSPs. The inability of this segment of society to build long-term financial security is closely linked to high levels of poverty among women, especially single mothers.

Advocacy groups like the Ecumenical Coalition for Economic Justice (ECEJ) are also raising the argument that it is unpaid work that allows for the paid workforce to function. "Unpaid work," says Lorraine Michaels of ECEJ, "which is invariably performed by women sustains the workplace."

Volunteer work, which is increasingly replacing and supplementing waged labour, is also an area that must be addressed. Government cutbacks in funding for social services heightens the pressure on women volunteers to pick up the slack and perform what are often deemed essential services for no pay.

What will make a difference? Education and advocacy. Arna Banack, Policy and Planning Manager of the Community Initiatives Unit of the Solicitor General's Office, says, "If we begin to recognize the fact that work in the home is work, we will understand that this investment in the home and children has great benefit not only for individual families but for society as a whole."

According to Banack, the struggle will be waged on several levels. She emphasizes that "the kind of societal change signaled by the Census will take many years and possibly many generations to effect. We must continue to move slowly towards the goal of valuing 'women's work,' whatever guise that takes."

JEWISH GENETIC LINK TO

BY SALLY LEVITA

Jewish women have a unique chance to take part in, and benefit from, new research into breast cancer. Several high-risk clinics in the province are studying a possible predisposition to breast cancer in Ashkenazi Jews. An international study, released in the United States last September, indicates nearly 1% of Ashkenazi Jews carry a gene mutation that may increase their risk of breast and ovarian cancer. The discovery was a joint effort by researchers in the U.S. and Israel, who tested DNA samples from randomly-selected Ashkenazi Jews. Various mutations of a gene known as BRCA1, have been linked to breast cancer. In the U.S./Israeli study, 0.9% of those tested carried a specific mutation of the BRCA1 gene.

WHAT YOU CAN DO...

1. Call The Marvelle Koffler Breast Cancer Centre at Mount Sinai Hospital for more information. (416) 586-8799.
2. Speak to your doctor about recent research and the implications it may have on your health.
3. Encourage your affiliate or other organizations to become involved in organizing or publicizing public education events. Please call The Familial Breast Cancer Clinic at (416) 586-3244.
4. Join the Pink Ribbon Campaign by calling the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation at (416) 596-6773.

Researchers say the occurrence of that one mutation among Ashkenazi Jews is about three times higher than the occurrence of all other types of BRCA1 mutations combined, in the general population.

What needs to be understood is how many Ashkenazi women already diagnosed with breast cancer have the mutation and what the implications are. Studies are planned to try to find these answers. One current study is being coordinated by the Ontario Cancer Genetics Network (OCGN), and includes investigators at Mount Sinai Hospital and The Toronto Sunnybrook Regional Cancer Centre.

The Marvelle Koffler Breast Centre at Mount Sinai currently works with women who have breast cancer or have a family history of cancer. The head of the clinic, Dr. Pam Goodwin, says they plan to expand those criteria to include Ashkenazi women with breast cancer, whether or not they have a family history of the disease. They hope to determine how common the mutation is in Ashkenazi women with breast cancer.

"We will be able to look at the prevalence or likelihood of a mutation in the gene in Ashkenazi women with breast cancer, according to a number of different factors: age, whether or not they have a family history, whether there are other risk factors," says Dr. Goodwin. "It will help us improve our understanding of the meaning of this mutation in that particular population."

The researchers want to determine the implications of this mutation in Ashkenazi women with breast

TOGETHER

WOMAN ABUSE: A Community Affair

BY LORI DENNIS

It is only within the last 10 years that research derived from Jewish social service agencies has begun to reveal the extent of wife abuse in the Jewish community.

According to Gail Gould, Supervisor of Toronto's Jewish Family and Child Service's Woman Abuse Program, there are, at any point in time, approximately 300 cases at JF&CS where woman abuse has been identified as an issue. When one considers that families on average have 2.2 children, one must recognize that this issue has enormous ramifications within the Jewish community.

ALL WOMEN VULNERABLE

"The literature and our clinical experience indicates that batterers are found in all socio-economic levels, all educational, racial and age groups. Violence knows no socio-economic or denominational distinctions. It occurs with equal frequency in poor and wealthy homes and in Reform, Reconstructionist, Conservative, Orthodox and Hassidic communities," says Gould.

In her article "Breaking the Silence....Reaching Out to Battered Jewish Women," Elana Eizak Kuperstein states that the premise of a Jewish husband harming his wife is so disbelieved that actual reports of woman abuse by Jewish men are usually met with complete denial. She contends that "Shalom Bayit" (Peace in the Home), while well intentioned to preserve and promote the sanctity of the Jewish home, has served to negate the existence of battered Jewish wives.

Now that it is becoming increasingly difficult for the Jewish community to deny that woman abuse exists in our own backyard, some obvious questions arise: "Why do Jewish women stay in abusive relationships?" "And, what is the Jewish community doing to support these women?"

Regarding the first question, it is noteworthy that a research study done by JF&CS in 1987 indicates that Jewish women stay in abusive relationships twice as long as non-Jewish women. A Jewish woman's difficulty in leaving a violent situation is often related to her belief that she is letting down the Jewish community. Not only is she admitting that her own "perfect" marriage is a myth, she also thinks she is contributing to the breakdown of Judaism's very core.....the family.

Her struggle to leave is also often related to her social and economic status. "The higher it is, the more difficult it is for some women to leave for fear of losing their status, their home and their family's good name and reputation," says Gould. JF&CS staff report that the Jewish community can be very judgmental. Long standing, well respected community members have a much harder time leaving than those who have fewer ties.

Finally, a woman's shame often encourages her to keep quiet and forego the very support she desperately needs. If she speaks up, she fears community disbelief and even reprisal.

JEWISH COMMUNITY RESPONSE

So what is the Jewish community doing to support these women? The answer is: more than ever, but still not enough.

In 1987, the Jewish Family and Child Service established the Woman Abuse Program both for battered women and for men who batter. Since its inception, the number of cases has grown significantly, and so has the number of services. These include long-term therapy groups, an incest survivor group, a sexual assault therapy group, and Jewish Family Life Education Workshops. In addition, JF&CS offers financial support for those who are abused, a short-term shelter with kosher facilities, as well as the "children witnessing violence program."

This year, Jewish Women's Federation is launching the first ever Women Abuse Awareness Program including a "Jewish Community Awareness Month" which will take place in May 1997. This coincides with the Provincial Sexual Assault Prevention Month. The purpose is to increase public awareness and support, to empower women who are victims of violence and to stimulate advocacy within the Jewish community. Initiatives which are already under way will be highlighted.

Such an initiative is being undertaken by Na'amat Canada, which has launched a free legal advisory service for women in abusive relationships. Lawyers are available to help women explore their options and to provide guidance and referrals to other resources in the community. Services are available in Russian and Hebrew. Na'amat has published a resource guide - "I can't believe it is happening" - an informative booklet on the nature of woman abuse, including a list of services for abused women, such as distress lines, shelters and individual and group counselling.

Another important initiative has been launched by Jewish Women International which has distributed a "Rabbi's Kit," which is designed to bring awareness to Rabbis on the issue of Woman Abuse and includes sermons on the topic.

These and similar efforts will be supported by JWF which is planning to provide synagogues, schools and other organizations with speakers, sermons and other resources to educate and raise awareness in the community. Rabbis will be encouraged to conduct at least one sermon throughout the year on Woman Abuse and will be sent resource directories to enable them to better support abused women in their congregations.

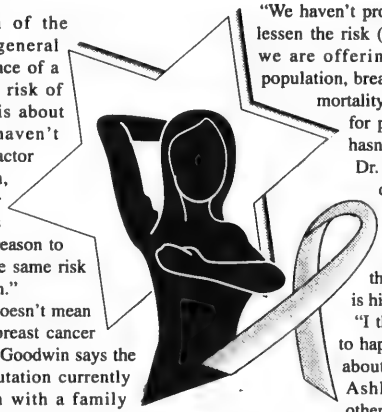
BREAST CANCER

cancer. With a mutation of the BRCA1 gene, in the general population and in the presence of a family history, the overall risk of developing breast cancer is about 87%. Researchers haven't determined a specific risk factor for the Ashkenazi mutation, but Irene Andrulis, director of Ontario Cancer Genetics Network, says, "There's no reason to think that it doesn't carry the same risk as any other BRCA1 mutation."



On the other hand, that doesn't mean all Ashkenazi women with breast cancer have the gene mutation. Dr. Goodwin says the only information on the mutation currently available involves women with a family history of breast cancer. It is important to determine what the mutation means for women without a family history. "We don't want to create undue anxiety," says Dr. Goodwin. "At the same time we don't want to say 'no,' it's meaningless." They'll know more once the results are in from these studies.

The only way Ontario women can currently be evaluated for this particular gene mutation is by taking part in one of the OCGN studies. However, Dr. Goodwin is quick to point out that genetic evaluation is only one part of the whole risk assessment process done at the clinic.

"We haven't proven that anything can be done to lessen the risk (of developing breast cancer), but we are offering screening." In the general population, breast cancer screening can reduce the mortality rate by 30%, but its effectiveness for people who carry a gene mutation hasn't been determined.

Dr. Goodwin admits the potential for direct benefit to women taking part in studies now is relatively low, but she says once the results from the studies have been analyzed, the potential for benefit in the future is high.

"I think in the long run, what's going to happen is we're going to know more about the genetics of breast cancer in Ashkenazi women than we will in other women and we'll be able to give them much better information, much more useful information, than we will be able to for the general population."

For more information about the study, or breast cancer in general, call The Familial Breast Cancer Clinic at (416) 586-3244. A public education event is being planned for the coming Fall.

Villeneuve letter angers CJC

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Raymond Villeneuve's attempt to excuse his outburst against Jews for their opposition to separation is not convincing to Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) or to at least one of the individuals he singled out.

In fact, as far as they're concerned, Villeneuve has only confirmed their opinion about him.

In a statement released to certain media, Villeneuve says it was "unfair to implicate all anglophone Jews as we did" in a September issue of La Tempete, a publication of the Mouvement de Liberation Nationale du Quebec (MLNQ), of which he is president.

He said he did so out of a "legitimate" anger, but now regrets the "form" he used.

"That many individuals (Like the leaders of CJC, B'nai Brith and Mssrs. [Mordecai] Richler, [Robert] Libman, [Howard] Galganov, etc.) of that community have transformed themselves into shock troops for a system of neo-colonial type exploitation and domination, that they can give moral support to the negation of the right of a people to existence, does not authorize us, in return, to target all of that community."

At the same time, Villeneuve chastises the community for not distancing itself from these "provocateurs."

He denies that he threatened violence against Jews, but rather "reproached" the community for its "monolithism."

Moreover, he maintains he is not anti-Semitic because he did not criticize francophone (Sephardi) Jews.

"This doesn't mitigate a thing; in fact, he's just making his anti-Semitism and racism obvious," said CJC Quebec Region executive-director Jack Jedwab. "I wouldn't call this an apology."

Robert Libman, who was one of the individuals named in La Tempete, finds this latest missive "just as disturbing" as Villeneuve's earlier statements.

Villeneuve defends his right to denounce the "barons" of the ethnic communities for "mobilizing their communities against Quebec and the French language ..."

He maintains that some of "the worst slanderers" of Quebec and the Quebec people are found among the ethnic communities.

Villeneuve warns ethnic Quebecers that "if they refuse to integrate into their country of welcome and that if they persist as communities to oppose the desire for emancipation of an entire people, they expose themselves to finger-pointing, if not worse. Above all, English domination of Quebec is not their cause."

Jedwab said CJC is going ahead with trying to have Villeneuve charged under the anti-hate laws for not only what he wrote in La Tempete, but also what he said in subsequent radio interviews.

Children Need love

Fighting has again erupted in Zaire. The lives of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands, are threatened. Children are almost always the first casualties of fighting because they are the most vulnerable.

Dr. Richard Hodes, head of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee medical team in Goma Zaire, examines a Rawandan child in the Kibumba refugee camp.

An Israeli soldier brings a Rawandan orphan to an orphanage after the child was successfully treated at an Israeli Defense Force field hospital in Ndosho, Zaire, July 28. two years ago.

Remembering and building for the future in Israel, children are called upon to build for the future even as they must remember the past.

The CJN enjoyed all of the Sukkot cartoons sent in by our readers. The three names selected from our hat were Avi Bernstein of Hamilton, Debra Mancini of Thornhill and Penina Rothenstein of Downsview. Each will receive a cheque for $20.

Dear CJN.
I would like to thank you all very much for the $20.00 which you sent me. I was so excited when I found out I won. There were so many people that recognized my name in The CJN. My little brother is turning 5 in November and I plan to buy him the greatest birthday gift ever with my prize money. Thank you so much again!

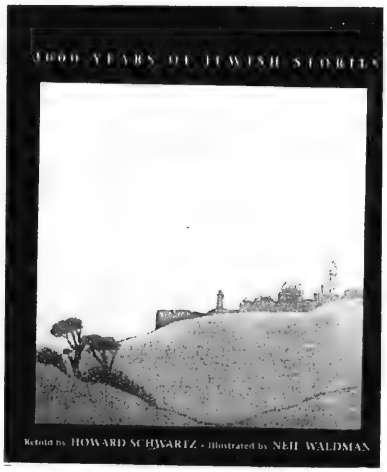
Legends of Jerusalem show generations of longing

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter



This year, Jerusalem is celebrating a very important anniversary – 3,000 years since King David made that city the capital of Israel.

Throughout the year, there have been joyful celebrations, including dance festivals, concerts, art competitions, dramatic presentations and even a biblical-style feast.

Howard Schwartz has produced a beautiful book about Jerusalem, called Next Year in Jerusalem: 3000 years of Jewish stories (Viking, 1996). It is full of legends and stories about the people and places of the city over the centuries.

Some of the stories are about famous rabbis, such as Rabbi Nachman of Bratslov. After he died, his followers kept his chair, out of their great respect for him. When they had to leave the city to escape from the Nazis, they each took a piece of the chair, intending to reassemble it in Jerusalem. Everyone who carried some of that chair survived the war.

There is a wonderful story about a little boy in Poland who is magically carried to Jerusalem, and one about Miriam, a child in the city when it was controlled by the Muslims, who is saved from death by King David himself.

All of the stories tell of the magic, the beauty and especially the holiness of this very special city.

The illustrations by Neil Waldman are full of dreamlike blues, purples, pinks and golds, showing the dreams of returning to Jerusalem that Jews have had over the years.

TAU research project may save cancerous larynx

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A research project at Rabin Medical Centre of Tel Aviv University (TAU) may save those with cancer of the larynx from losing their voice.

Dr. Raffi Feinmesser, oto-larygologist-in-chief of the centre, told a recent meeting of Canadian Friends of Tel Aviv University that researchers are studying the P53 gene, which prevents the multiplication of unhealthy cells, removes dead or damaged ones, and suppresses the development of new tumors.

If the P53 gene itself is damaged, he explained, then diseased cells (like cancer cells) will multiply.

The treatment for cancer of the larynx has typically consisted of removing the larynx, which leaves the patient unable to speak. One reason for this, Feinmesser said, is that because of the physiology of the larynx and its small size, it is very difficult for a pathologist to determine just where the cancerous cells are.

The new study suggests that if the P53 gene is found, then surgeons can more accurately determine how much of the larynx needs to be removed.

There are 12,000 cases of laryngeal cancer in the United States each year, he said. Total removal of the larynx gives security, but at a terrible price. "To take away less than the whole thing means you may be giving [the patient] life — or just leaving the voice for a short time."

The Isabel Silverman CISEPO program of Toronto's Mount Sinai Hospital is helping to fund the research, he said.

Drs. Raffi Feinmesser (left) from Rabin Medical Centre, Tel Aviv University, and Arnold Noyek, from Mount Sinai Hospital in Toronto. [Leila Speisman photo]

Dr. Arnold Noyek, executive director of CISEPO and otolaryngologist-in-chief of Mount Sinai Hospital, told the gathering of over 100 people that CISEPO is involved with assisting medical research and care in many countries.

Because it is a non-governmental agency. "We are not caught up in bureaucracy, and so can work at all levels," including medical outreach, education, multidisciplinary programs, innovative uses of technology and fellowships. Feinmesser, in fact, was the first fellow trained in head and neck surgery under CISEPO.

Research projects have been carried out between various countries, including Canada, Israel and Norway, and a program Noyek is instrumental in arranging between Canada, Israel and Jordan (called Looking East).

Besides Feinmesser's study, many of CISEPO's programs in Israel are based at Tel Aviv University. One, in conjunction with Hebrew University, helps Soviet olim re-establish themselves as practitioners and researchers.

A molecular biology lab, which has allowed Feinmesser to do his study, has been established at TAU, and is also studying Alzheimer's disease.

"The sense of smell seems to go first in Alzheimer's disease," Noyek said, and the lab is studying that in collaboration with staff at Baycrest Hospital."

Noyek said that CISEPO hopes to soon become an associate member of the Middle East Cancer Consortium, which, together with Looking East, will, he hopes, "contribute to the peace process."

Technology aids bypass surgery

By WENDY ELLIMAN
Jerusalem Dateline

JERUSALEM, Israel — Israelis have adapted technology used for night vision by the IDF and developed a thermal-imaging camera that helps ensure the success of coronary bypass surgery.

The system, said to be the first of its kind in the world, was created by Opgal Medical, a company based in the Galilee town of Karmiel. It has been developed and tested in the Cardiothoracic Surgery Department of the Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical Centre in Jerusalem.

Israel performs some 4,000 coronary artery bypass operations each year. Vessels taken from the patient's leg are transferred to the heart in order to circumvent coronary arteries clogged with plaque.

"Before we had this camera, surgeons relied on their experience and intuition as to whether blood-flow through the grafted vessels was normal," says Prof. Gideon Merin, head of Cardiothoracic Surgery at Hadassah.

Experience and intuition can now be scientifically borne out, however, by the newly developed intraoperative vascular angiography system (IVA). Suspended a metre above the patient during surgery, the IVA camera can pick up variations in temperature inside the grafted vessels as minuscule as less than one C.

Within three to four years, Dr. Zucker anticipates that IVA will become equipment around the world. "It has already been successfully used to perform several hundred bypass grafts in Israel, and is now being tested in the United States, Italy, Spain and Britain."

Israel to hold security meetings with Russia

By DAVID MAKOVSKY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – Regular strategic consultations will be held with Russia's security and diplomatic establishments to discuss such issues as terror and Islamic militancy, Israeli ambassador to Russia Aliza Shenhar told reporters last week on the eve of the visit by Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov.

Primakov also held talks in Syria, Lebanon and Egypt.

Russia is "willing, like us, to institutionalize a regular dialogue with us on issues such as terror and radical Islam," Shenhar said.

She said a preliminary dialogue has begun between diplomats, but now it will both be regularized and expanded to "include the entire establishment in both countries."

Security sources, however, suggested that Russia has not yet formalized an agreement to such a dialogue.

Shenhar said that Moscow, which is an official co-sponsor of the 1991 Madrid peace conference, is also seeking a more active role in the peace process. However, both Foreign Ministry Director-General Eitan Bentsur and Shenhar indicated they wanted this role to deal with reviving the largely moribund multilateral talks on regional cooperation, designed to supplement the sensitive bilateral peace talks on peace, security and land.

"We very much value the multilaterals, and we think that Russia could have a key role in advancing those issues," Bentsur said. "The foreign minister expects to raise this issue with his Russian counterpart."

Bentsur and Shenhar sought to soften the image of Primakov, who is largely perceived as an Arabist. They both said that Israel deeply valued his knowledge of Middle East affairs and his connection with Arab leaders.

Shenhar said that Moscow is interested not only in selling arms to the region, but in increasing its economic profile. She said that, like France, Russia has dispatched oil and trade teams to Baghdad so that it will be ready when UN sanctions against Iraq are lifted and business can commence.

When asked if the question of selling a Russian nuclear reactor to Iran would be raised with Primakov, Foreign Ministry officials suggested that it is better for the United States to explore this with Russia.

Shenhar noted that Iranian students are coming to Moscow to learn more about Russian nuclear technology.

After Primakov met with Foreign Minister David Levy, the two were to sign an agreement on establishing cultural centres in each other's country. Moreover, Levy is expected to symbolically hand Primakov the registration of Russian properties in downtown Jerusalem, thereby closing an issue which has been an irritant in the bilateral relationship.

With the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991, Russia made an agreement that it would assume all liabilities and assets of the former regime. Therefore, Moscow was upset that Israel had engaged in the cumbersome procedure, which took years, of asking all former members of the Soviet Union if they had objections to the registration transfer.

Earlier this year, it was decided to transfer the registration. The properties are a parking lot on King George Street, which Russia reportedly wants to turn into an office building; the court complex in the Russian Compound; and the adjoining Holy Trinity Cathedral.

Another irritant to the relationship was removed a few weeks ago when Russia renewed the registration of the Jewish Agency in Moscow, which had been revoked during the Russian election campaign earlier this year. The United States had intervened on Israel's behalf.

Primakov will also speak with Industry and Trade Minister Natan Sharansky in a meeting scheduled at Russia's request. The Russian authorities have invited Sharansky to visit Russia at the end of next month, the first time he will be visiting since emerging from a prison camp in early 1986.

Primakov was also scheduled to visit Gaza.

Bill would invalidate non-Orthodox conversions

By HAIM SHAPIRO
JerusalemPost Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – A bill designed to invalidate Reform and Conservative conversions performed in Israel is to be submitted to the Knesset within two weeks, following an agreement between representatives of the religious parties and Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, a spokesperson for the National Religious Party said last week.

Yehoshua Mor-Yosef said that the proposed law intends to deal with conversions performed in Israel. Spokespersons for the Reform Movement, however, have expressed fear that the law would also relate to conversions performed outside of Israel.

According to the Law of Return, which establishes the right of all Jews to come to Israel, a Jew is anyone born of a Jewish mother or anyone who was converted to Judaism. The High Court of Justice has declared valid any conversion carried out by a Jewish community abroad, non-Orthodox as well as Orthodox. Repeated efforts to amend the Law of Return to state that conversion refers only to conversion according to Halachah have generated vehement protests from Diaspora Jewry, especially the American Jewish community.

Last year, for the first time, the court ruled that a Reform conversion performed in Israel could not be declared invalid for civil purposes, although the court did not order the Interior Ministry to register the convert as Jewish in the population registry. According to Mor-Yosef, there are now 15 cases of local Reform conversions before the High Court.

Anat Bendor, an attorney for the Reform Movement's Israel Religious Action Centre, said that the proposed law could be used to prevent Reform and Conservative converts from immigrating to Israel.

"The proposed law, as stated, does not distinguish between conversion abroad and that in Israel. A Jewish Agency official could tell a convert abroad that he would have to have his conversion approved by the [Israeli] Chief Rabbinate," Bendor said.

Mor-Yosef said that the proposed law now has the support of all the parties in the coalition, including Yisrael b'Aliyah, which, he noted, has a vested interest in the issue. Yisrael b'Aliyah spokesperson Motti Inbari said yesterday that apparently the party would agree to the passage of the law, although this had not been formally approved by the party's institutions. According to Inbari, there are about 150,000 immigrants from the former Soviet Union who are not halachically Jewish.

Rabbi Richard Hirsch, executive director of the World Union for Progressive Judaism, said it is outrageous that the government should come to such a decision this week, when the Jewish Agency Board of Governors is meeting in Jerusalem. The majority of the board members are not Orthodox, and the majority of contributors to the Jewish Agency are not Orthodox, Hirsch said.

"The reality is that a significant proportion of Jews in the Diaspora are converts to Judaism and do so through non-Orthodox rabbis," Hirsch said.

In Israel, Hirsch said, some 10,000 people a year apply to the rabbinate to convert to Judaism, but the rabbinate carries out only around 400 conversions a year.

Egypt not inviting leaders to economic parley

By DAVID MAKOVSKY
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM – So as to avoid inviting Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to this month's Cairo economic meeting at a time of tense regional relations, Egypt has decided not to invite any heads of government, senior officials said.

"Within the last week, Egypt decided not to invite heads of government due to the poor regional climate," a key official said.

Egypt felt this was not the time to invite Netanyahu to Cairo, another senior official said. Netanyahu had publicly made clear his interest in attending the event.

This marks the first time since the annual economic conferences began in Casablanca in 1994 that heads of state have not been invited.

Therefore, the parley in Cairo is now being called an "economic conference" rather than an "economic summit."

Egypt was apparently waiting for the IDF redeployment in Hebron to take place. Since this has not occurred, Egypt decided to downgrade the political representation at the parley.

Foreign Minister David Levy will be the top official representing Israel. He will be joined by Finance Minister Dan Meridor, Trade and Industry Minister Natan Sharansky, and Communications Minister Limor Livnat.

Egyptian ambassador to Israel Mohammed Bassiouny confirmed that heads of government would not be invited, but denied that this was tied to the regional atmosphere or an interest in excluding Netanyahu.

"There is no political issue behind it. We would like to concentrate on the economic issues, so we invited the ministerial level," Bassiouny said.

An official in the Prime Minister's Office also sought to downplay the fact that Netanyahu will not be invited. He said there is a need to build economic cooperation even during a period of political turbulence.

Jordan, Israel to open consulates

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM – In an effort to promote tourism and facilitate trade, the Hashemite kingdom and the Jewish state plan to open consulates in the Red Sea towns of Eilat, Israel, and Aqaba, Jordan, respectively.

The decision was made by joint committees formed under the 1994 peace treaty between the two nations.

A spokesperson for the Israeli Embassy in Amman said additional measures were being considered, including free, one-day visas for tourists.

Meanwhile, Israeli President Ezer Weizman plans to travel next week to Amman to meet with King Husseln.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 28

• The head of the IDF's manpower division met with Batya Arad, mother of captured Israeli air navigator Ron Arad, to brief her on the latest mission of German mediator Bernd Schmidbauer. Schmidbauer was in Israel after establishing contacts last week in Lebanon in an effort to get information about Arad.

Oct. 29

• The Knesset began debate on the 1997 budget and economic arrangements bill amid threats from coalition members to vote against the budget, saying that it hurts the weaker sectors of society.

Oct. 30

• The Board of Governors of the Jewish Agency for Israel concluded its meetings in Jerusalem after approving a $502 (US) budget for 1997. The board also approved a strategic planning process to define the goals of the agency, now in the midst of a five-year fiscal recovery and reform program for the next century.

• The Tel Aviv District Court handed down stiff prison sentences and fines to six Israeli Discount Bank investment counsellors convicted of stock manipulation.

Oct. 31

• Maj.-Gen. Oren Shahor, the coordinator of activities in the territories, came under fire from certain coalition members after Israeli media reported that he had recently met with and briefed opposition leader Shimon Peres and former minister Yossi Beilin.

• President Ezer Weizman announced plans to travel next week to Amman to meet with King Hussein.

Nov. 1

• The Supreme Court rejected a petition that has been holding up construction on a controversial Jewish neighborhood at Jerusalem's Har Homa.

Orient House focus of tension

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Orient House, the Palestinians' chief institution in East Jerusalem, continues to be a flashpoint in Israel's tense relations with the Palestinians.

Mideast Analysis

A stately 19th-century Ottoman-style building in the sedate American Colony neighborhood, Orient House functions on two levels. It is the PLO's quasi-foreign ministry and it provides services to Palestinian economic, social, educational and cultural institutions.

Founded in the 1980s, Orient House was at first the headquarters of the Arab Studies Society, an organization Israel suspected of being a front group for the then banned PLO.

Once the Madrid peace process got underway in October 1991, Orient House was the seat of the Palestinian delegation to the peace negotiations, as well as a venue of meetings between foreign dignitaries and leading PLO officials.

With the signing of the September 1993 Declaration of Principles, and Israel's recognition of the PLO, the importance of Orient House increased.

Israel was never happy with Orient House because its very existence was a constant challenge to Israel's territorial claim to eastern Jerusalem, which is recognized neither by the Palestinians nor by the world community.

In response, the Knesset passed a law outlawing political activity by the Palestinian Authority (PA) anywhere in Israel (including East Jerusalem, which the Israeli government annexed in 1967).

The director of Orient House, Faisal al-Husseini, the PLO's top official in East Jerusalem, claimed that Orient House was not funded by the PA and thus was in compliance with the Oslo accords. As further proof of his assertion, he reminded the Israeli authorities that Shimon Peres, Israel's foreign minister, had written a letter in October 1993 attesting to the usefulness of Palestinian institutions in East Jerusalem.

Israel, however, claimed that there was a direct connection between Orient House and the PA. Israel argued that Palestinian institutions under the umbrella of Orient House were directly funded by the PA and therefore were subordinate to the PA.

In February 1994, Israel's internal security minister, Moshe Shahal, brashly announced that foreign visitors would be prevented from setting foot in Orient House. Israel was irritated by the fact that numerous foreign ministers had visited Orient House, which was fast becoming the spearhead of Palestinian efforts to establish a foothold of sovereignty in East Jerusalem.

Shahal did not carry out his threat because the Israeli cabinet was divided. When Peres noted that Israel could not prevent foreign ministers from visiting Orient House and admitted that he had resigned himself to such visits, Shahal quietly dropped the matter, much to the indignation of Ehud Olmert, the Likud mayor of Jerusalem.

As the debate raged, the Likud bloc presented a Knesset bill to close down Orient House. The proposed legislation passed its first reading, but later died in committee.

During last spring's general election campaign, Benjamin Netanyahu promised to shut down Orient House. But once Netanyahu was in office, the Likud government backed off, modifying its position.

Speaking on Netanyahu's behalf, Olmert declared that Israel would not press its case, provided foreign diplomats stopped visiting Orient House and thus depoliticized the issue.

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani, who is chiefly responsible for the Orient House dossier, concurs with this tactic. Recently, he said that he will not exert pressure on Orient House if it upholds the provisions of the Oslo accords.

Israel's resolve has been tested by France, which favors a Palestinian state. In July, France's foreign minister, Herve de Charette, agreed to boycott Orient House in exchange for Netanyahu's pledge not to portray his no-show as an Israeli victory. Last month, when Jacques Chirac, the president of France, visited Israel, he dispatched his deputy health minister to Orient House, pointedly leaving his foreign minister at home.

In honoring Israel's wishes, France was hewing to the European Union (EU) guidelines. In a recent policy decision taken in Florence, the EU decided that visits by foreign ministers to Orient House were no longer mandatory.

Israel has no vital interest in blowing the Orient House controversy out of all proportion. But Netanyahu has warned the EU that if it challenges Israel's policy, Israel will not receive EU officials.

Yasser Arafat, president of the PA, has promised David Levy — Israel's foreign minister — that the PA will desist from political activity in Jerusalem. But in light of Palestinian claims in East Jerusalem, it remains to be seen whether Arafat will be willing or able to honor his commitment.

Announcing
THE BRONFMAN YOUTH FELLOWSHIPS IN ISRAEL 1997

For the eleventh consecutive summer, a group of outstanding Jewish teenagers in the U.S. and Canada, coming from a wide variety of backgrounds and entering the twelfth grade of school, will be recipients of the Bronfman Youth Fellowships*. They will spend five fulfilling weeks of study, dialogue and travel in Israel.

The Bronfman Fellows will be selected on the basis of character, intellectual interests, special talents and leadership qualities. Merit, not financial need, is the program's selection standard. Fellowship activities begin on June 30, with a return from Israel on August 5. All meals will be kosher, and Sabbath activities will be in the spirit of the day.

Based in Jerusalem, the Fellows will engage in an intense interaction with a diverse rabbinic faculty and counselors, representing a wide range of Jewish perspectives. They will explore Jewish texts against the background of Israel's land, culture and customs ... take part, at a time of rapid change, in seminars with some of the country's leading political and cultural figures ... debate ideas and search for insights, on the different ways to define oneself as a Jew today, all in an atmosphere of mutual respect and open dialogue.

The purpose: to return home with a new understanding of the myriad issues facing the Jewish people and the Jewish state, and a new appreciation of the need for dialogue among Jews.

For a descriptive brochure and application form, please call or write at once to:

Churchill and the Jews

Wednesday, November 13, 8 p.m.

1950 Bathurst Street

Admission Free

Martin Gilbert is the official biographer of Britain's War leader, Sir Winston Churchill. Since 1968 he has published six volumes of the Churchill biography, and a further nine volumes of Churchill's collected papers, as well as a one-volume compendium Churchill, a Life, published by Holt in New York in 1991. These widely acclaimed volumes have established Martin Gilbert in the forefront of modern history.

As a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford since 1962, Gilbert has also made a major contribution to the study of Jewish history. His two most recent books are Auschwitz and the Allies (Holt) and the Holocaust (Holt). These books are scrupulously researched, reveal much new evidence and form the basis of a number of fascinating and moving lectures.

French Jews angered by Chirac's Mideast trip

By LEE YANOWITCH
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

PARIS – French President Jacques Chirac upset not only Israel and the United States during his six-day visit to the Middle East, but also Jewish community leaders in his own country.

Leading voices in France's Jewish community said they felt betrayed by Chirac's overt pro-Arab positions, adding that his behavior was too biased for someone posing as a mediator.

During his trip, Chirac called on Israel to back the creation of a Palestinian state and to return the Golan Heights to Syria, stances firmly rejected by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

And while he addressed the Palestinian legislative council, he refused to address the Israeli Knesset.

Chirac, who was campaigning for a European peacemaking role in the Middle East, also praised President Hafez al-Assad of Syria.

His very public display of fury at Israeli police during his tour of Jerusalem's Old City was also seen by many as pandering to Arab interests.

"The mind set of the Jewish community in France today is incomprehension, disappointment and concern. The community is having a hard time understanding the French position," said Henri Hajdenberg, president of CRIF, the umbrella group of secular French Jewish organizations.

"In diplomacy, there are two types of behavior: discreet or spectacular. France has fallen into the latter, by taking sides publicly, which reflects its political points of view, not those of a mediator, who is expected to bring together the parties involved," he added.

The chief rabbi of France, Rabbi Joseph Sitruk, has asked to meet with Chirac "to better understand what he meant.

David Broza concert a triumph of awesome talent

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Planted on a simple stool on a bare stage, one leg dangling, his face glowing, David Broza furiously strummed an electric guitar and let forth a stream of lilting folk rock melodies.

Clad in black, and occasionally mopping his brow with a white towel, Israel's foremost rock singer was on the last lap of a Canadian tour, fresh from concerts in Montreal, Ottawa and London.

Broza was in his prime, and his audience, a preponderance of young women, adored his two-hour, nonstop concert, squealing, shouting and clapping appreciatively.

Appearing last week in a musty old theatre in Toronto's Hellenic quarter, Broza — the acme of cosmopolitanism — showed why he is probably Israel's greatest performing and recording artist.

Born in Israel, raised in Spain and now living in the United States, he was totally at ease in Hebrew, English and Spanish.

In a strong, resonant, smoky voice, this appealing troubadour sang of love and romance, of longing and identity and of memorable landscapes. And jocularly at one point, he launched into a Hebrew version of the blues.

Broza's poetic-tinged, flamenco-flecked songs, culled from such albums as The Woman By My Side and Stone Doors, were by turns cheerful and mournful, introspective and extroverted.

A natural and supple performer, he segued from an ironic melody about secret love letters to a celebration of a Rocky Mountain state.

But the most indelible impression he finally left was that of a masterful musician. Broza is a superb guitarist, milking the instrument for all it is worth.

In Broza's hands, the guitar fuses with his soul. It soars and it swoons. It is a rumbling locomotive and a trembling murmur. It is at once redolent of classical Spain and sabra Israel.

And as he sat there, inexhaustibly singing his heart out and strumming like there was no tomorrow , Broza conquered the crowd completely, the concert a triumph of awesome talent and endless energy.

Egypt offers multi-visas

By DAVID HARRIS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Israeli businessmen now can get a single "multi-visa" for as many visits to Egypt as they want in any six month period, Egyptian ambassador Mohammed Bassiouny said recently.

The announcement was well received by some 30 businessmen, who had expressed concern at the bureaucratic difficulties of travelling to Egypt.

Speaking in Tel Aviv, Bassiouny made an impassioned plea for all sides to make the Cairo economic summit a major success.

"Egypt will be proud to hold the conference next month," said the ambassador. "I believe that you recognize the economic potential of the Middle East. In spite of all the challenges, which we do not exaggerate nor underestimate, there are bridges which could be crossed."

While there was consensus on the potential importance of the conference, Koor chairman Benny Gaon expressed concern about the predicted lack of participation by Egyptian companies. So far 52 have registered.

"There should be some signals from the top of the Egyptian government and the president, signalling to the business community in Egypt that they have a green light to move ahead," said Gaon.

"Of course, we have given the green light - this conference is very important," said Bassiouny.

Major Discoveries Found in Israeli Digs

It has been one of the best years yet for archeology in Israel, where uncovering the past is a national pastime. All over the country, experts have come up with exceptional finds. Among them:

• An amphitheatre above the theatre in Beit She'an. The Byzantine theatre and surrounding ruins in the southern Israel centre of archeology attract hundreds of thousands each year. Also discovered was another bath house in the heart of town. Beit She'an was destroyed by an earthquake in the seventh century CE, but has been rebuilt in recent decades into the spectacular tourist attraction it is today.

• The walls from the Roman Temple of Augustus, built by King Herod in Caesaria. An archeological team from Haifa University is studying how the city's port was built.

• A 100-square-metre mosaic floor, revealed during highway widening in Lod, near Tel Aviv. The floor features complex images of animals and fish.

• The ruins of a Samaritan temple on Mount Gerizim. The Samaritan structure is said to resemble the Jewish Temple in various ways. Mount Gerizim is cited in the Bible as the mountain towards which blessings were directed by some of the Hebrew tribes.

Archeological excavations are undertaken not only by Israeli specialists but also by visiting teams from around the world. Israel offers some exciting programs for archeology volunteers. To obtain information on any of the current digs, please write to the Israel Antiquities Authority, P.O. Box 586, Jerusalem 91004 Israel. CJC Mission to Israel

Members of the community are invited to join Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) officials on a Congress Executive Mission to Israel, set for Feb. 23 to March 4, 1997.

Participants on the '97 mission are expected to meet with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and senior members of the Israeli cabinet, the oppostion, Palestinian leadership, Canada's ambassador to Israel and the media. Briefings by officials of the Israel Defence Forces are also scheduled.

The trip involves extensive touring to strategic sites such as the Golan Heights, the Israel-Lebanon border and a military base, as well as visits to Yad Vashem, the Kotel (Western Wall) and other spots. According to plans, the group will fly Air Canada and stay at the Laromme Hotel in Jerusalem and the Carlton Hotel in Tel Aviv.

"This represents a very important venture for the CJC," said CJC national executive chair Renee Switzer Bellas of Vancouver.

"It has become a matter of CJC policy that we convene in Israel at least once during every three-year mandate. We feel it is a very special way of experiencing Israel, by meeting up close and personal with the decision makers."

While the mission has largely been arranged for CJC national and regional officers, members of the community at large are being encouraged to register.

"While we will be having a meeting of our national executive, we have found in the past that this kind of trip represents a wonderful opportunity for others in our community to take part in our deliberations and learn more about CJC," said president Goldie Hershon.

Total price of the trip is $2,199 (double occupancy) from Toronto or Montreal. The price includes all taxes and gratuities, daily breakfasts and some other meals. Application forms are available from the CJC national office, 514-931-7531, any regional CJC office or the official travel agent, Sabra Tours of Toronto, 416-222-0011.

Shine opens up Madness Fest

TORONTO — This year's Rendezvous With Madness Film Festival will open up with a gala screening of Shine, one of the hottest films of this year's Toronto International Film Festival.

The film, which won the People's Choice Award and the Metro Media Award at the festival will be shown Nov.13 at 7:30 p.m.

Shine stars Lynn Redgrave, John Gielguld and Armin Mueller-Stahl. It is based on the life story of David Helfgott, the classical pianist who suffered a complete nervous breakdown in his 20s, only to rise again to great acclaim.

A panel which includes filmmaker Morley Markson, psychiatrist and author Dr. Vivian Rakoff, Toronto writer Anne Steacy and renowned classical pianist Anton Kuerti, will discuss Helfgott's triumph over psychic breakdown the experience of psychiatric treatment and the legacy of Holocaust wounds.

Prior to the film, from 5:30 p.m. there is a wine and cheese reception and a viewing of works of the artists involved with the Depressive and Manic Depressive Association's yearly art exhibit, Art of Darkness.

Rendezvous With Madness takes place Nov. 13 and 17. It is organized by the Workman Theatre Project, a non-profit theatre company which operates out of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre.

More budget cuts looming

BY DAVID HARRIS
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — The government probably will have to make an additional budget cut in 1997, Israel's budget director Ran Kroll said.

Treasury officials handed the Knesset their NIS190.8 billion budget early, so politicians can have time to read the document before the budget debate scheduled last week.

Despite speculation to the contrary, the proposed 1997 budget cut remains unchanged at NIS4.9 billion. Both Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Finance Minister Dan Meridor have indicated this cut is the absolute minimum needed to correct what they see as excess public expenditure by the Labor government over the last two years.

Speaking ahead of the introduction of the budget to the Knesset, Kroll said that since the original 1997 proposals were formulated in July, there has been a change in the country's economic indicators. This, he said, will force a rethinking in the level of the cuts.

"Amongst other things, there has been a reduction in the GDP that we expected and revenues are lower than expected," said Kroll. "As a result we will have to recommend appropriate steps.

Jewish themes central to Matt Cohen's work

JEWISH AUTHORS

BY BILL GLADSTONE

TORONTO — Matt Cohen strides into the Future Cafe on Bloor Street West wearing a hat that looks suspiciously like the hat favored by one of the two brothers who are the main characters in his latest novel, Last Seen (Knopf, $28.95).

Over a cup of coffee, however, the 54-year-old Kingston-born novelist insists that it isn't strictly necessary for a writer to stick to what he knows.

"You write not only about what you know, but also about what you're capable of imagining. People don't necessarily write well about their own lives. Sometimes they can write well about other people's lives."

Harold and Alec, the brothers in Last Seen, resemble no one that Cohen knows, he says, yet he claims complete knowledge of them. "About certain characters you know anything and you can write about any detail in their lives. You can write about the clothing they have stuck in a cardboard box under their desk. These are the characters you end up writing about."

Harold, a talented advertising exec, is struck down by brain cancer in his middle years. Alec, a writer and teacher, is devastated by the loss, which has followed their father's death by too few years. The survivor's depression soon gives way to bewilderment and wonderment as he encounters the post-mortal Harold and their mutual companion, Francine, at the mysterious Club Elvis on Toronto's Queen Street.

Harold, still alive? Apparently so, though not even the ghost can explain this bizarre and surreal twist.

Like the characters in several of Cohen's previous novels — including The Spanish Doctor (1984), Nadine (1986) and Emotional Arithmetic (1990) — the protagonists in Last Seen are Jewish.

"In Canada, I'm seen quite correctly as a Canadian writer," he observes. "But in Europe, I'm seen as a Jewish writer, and the fact that I'm Canadian is completely meaningless to them.

"The odd thing is, I'm not seen as a Jewish writer in Canada. Whoever the official Jewish writers are, I'm seldom considered to be one of them."

Obviously, though, Jewish matters are central to at least part of Cohen's eclectic oeuvre of 12 novels and eight non-fictional works. The Spanish Doctor, for example, unveils a rich tapestry of Jewish life in Toledo in the years before the Spanish Inquisition. Descendants of the characters from that novel inhabit the subsequent novels Nadine and Emotional Arithmetic, Cohen points out.

"When I started writing The Spanish Doctor, I realized that so much of the way the world sees the Jews, and the way the Jews see themselves, has been shaped by the Second World War. So much of the past has been blacked out by the hugeness of those events. That's why I wanted to do The Spanish Doctor. That was a very interesting period in Spain, and Jews led very interesting lives then."

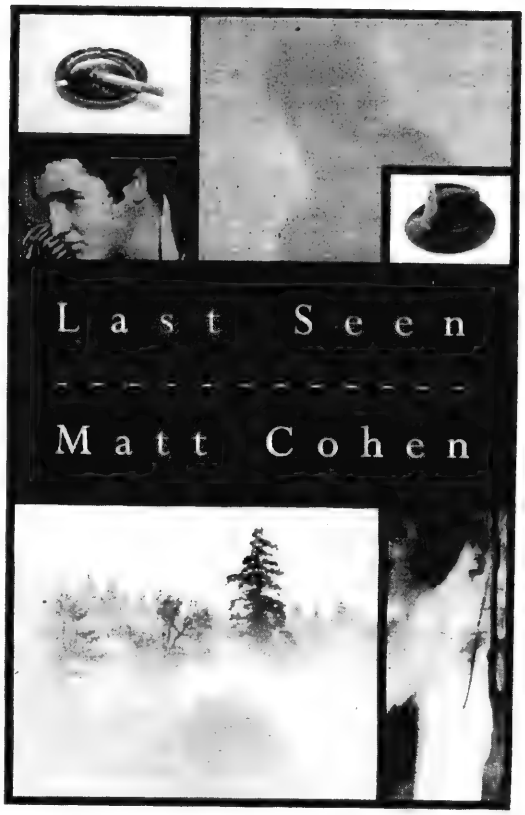
Currently writing a screenplay for Emotional Arithmetic for the Canadian company Triptych Films, Cohen has also been researching medieval Jewish life in southern France for a future novel.

"A lot of Jews settled there because they had a freedom there that they didn't have in the rest of France," he says.

"It's an interesting period for Judaism because many of the questions that exist now existed then. For example: How should Jews in exile continue being Jews? And what degree of isolation and assimilation is appropriate?"

Considering the good notices that Last Seen has garnered — Margaret Atwood called it the author's "best novel to date" — and the fact that his well-received 1993 novel The Bookseller has just been commercially released in the United States, Cohen may soon need his hat as camouflage against a growing legion of fans. He is, after all, considered among the top rank of Canadian novelists.

The interview concluded, he dons his coat and hat and steps out into the October drizzle, still free to amble unrecognized through a city where his books sell well and his name has become increasingly known.



Shaham's royalties sent to kibbutz

TORONTO – With a new book on Israel's bestseller lists, Israeli author Nathan Shaham seems pleased by the renewed attention he is receiving but altogether indifferent to the financial rewards that usually come with having penned a successful novel.

That's because all royalty cheques go to Kibbutz Bet Alfa, south of Lake Kinneret, where the Tel-Aviv-born writer has lived for more than 50 of his 71 years.

"Living on Bet Alfa, I never had to think about the commercial side of my writing," said the author, who recently spent several weeks in Toronto, visiting family. "I'm lucky that I sell very well and the kibbutz is happy about the royalties. If I didn't sell so well, I'd be uneasy to see other people working so hard around me."

Shaham's new book, Lev Tel Aviv (The Heart of Tel Aviv), focuses on the rich history and personalities associated with several buildings in one city block of Tel Aviv, roughly defined by Yavneh, Ahad Ha'am and Karl Netter streets, from 1924 to the present.

Many smaller stories are woven into the main plot, in which the sons of a famous local painter and a celebrated local writer attempt to save the buildings from demolition in order to establish a museum to honor their parents as Israeli cultural pioneers.

Having based the fiction on real life, Shaham said he had no difficulty keeping the plot interesting, since the actual events were intriguing enough.

"I didn't have to imagine anything," he said, "but I had to cut out some of the facts because they were too unbelievable. Some coincidences can happen only in real life."

Author of some 45 books, including 14 novels, essays, plays, short story anthologies and travel books, Shahams previous novel, The Rosendorf Quartet, won Israel's Bialik Prize and the prestigious U.S. National Jewish Book Award in 1992. It has been translated into several languages, including Russian and Chinese, and it received a favorable half-page review in the Beijing Daily News, China's largest newspaper.

The chair of the literary department in the Israeli culture and art council, Shaham characterizes contemporary Israeli writing as a "coexistence of realism and surrealism and experimental literature."

Shaham is currently working on another three novels involving his memories of many persons who, like himself, participated in the founding of the state.

As a youth between 1943 and 1945, he was a liaison between the Stern and the Haganah, and interacted closely with Yitzhak Rabin, Moshe Dayan, Yigal Alon, Moshe Sneh, Chaim Barlev and others who have loomed large in Israeli political life and history.

"I still have some friends from that period," he said. "At one time we were enemies, but after so many years we have become friends.

"But most of the close friends of my youth have died already, so I decided now I can write about them. I'm trying to write about political figures the way I knew them as people. Once they become historical figures, their personalities tend to disappear."

One political figure that Shaham has not yet warmed up to, however, is Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. How does he feel about the election results?

"Bad," he said, after a moment's hesitation. "I want to believe that Netanyahu and his government will have to take the route to peace because there is no other way. That's all I'd like to say."

He and his wife were in Toronto visiting their son, Yavin Shaham, a research scientist at the Addiction Research Foundation, and their daughter-in-law and three grandsons.

Shoppers soars like an eagle under Bloom's wing

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A depiction of an eagle by Canadian artist Robert Bateman occupies prime wall space above David Bloom's office desk.

To the chairman and chief executive officer of Shoppers Drug Mart, the large bird — noted for its size, strength and powers of flight and vision — is symbolic of the corporation he leads. "I always felt Shoppers wanted to fly like an eagle. It soars. It's got confidence. It's got the qualities I think a company should have."

The description applies equally well to Bloom himself: recently named Canadian Retailer of the Year by the Retail Council of Canada, Bloom, 53, has overseen the growth of Shoppers in the past 13 years from 406 franchised stores with $1 billion in sales to 850 stores with $4 billion in sales across Canada.

Most recently, Shoppers bought the 135-store Big V chain. The stores will be converted to Shoppers early in 1997, around the same time the company wraps up its three-year Vision 97 program, which will consolidate buying, accounting and distribution systems.

Bloom sees a potential of 1,000 Shoppers franchises altogether. He is not interested in growth for growth's sake, he noted recently, pointing out that the company has only 66 Pharmaprix stores in Quebec, but the acquisition of Big V brings the number of Shoppers stores in Ontario up to 450.

Ironically, Bloom was the recipient of condolences as well as congratulations when Murray Koffler, Shoppers' founder and Bloom's mentor, handed over the company reins in 1983 — some people assumed the company was already at its peak.

Obviously they didn't know David Bloom well. It's typical for him to "come up with 10 ideas [on his way] downtown, and he'll be on his carphone to different executives to shoot out ideas to us," said Arthur Konviser, Shoppers' senior vice-president, public affairs, who's known Bloom for 20 years.

"We want to be the very best pharmacy in Canada," Bloom said.

To that end, he's been known to conduct on-the-spot interviews with store customers to find out what they would change about Shoppers. A recent workday saw him visit eight different stores.

Although the company also uses professional market researchers, Bloom's informal surveys have indicated general trends like an increased need for prescription delivery, as well as specific problems like understaffing in a particular store.

The Bateman eagle in the office of Shoppers Drug Mart CEO David Bloom (above) represent his vision of the company.

A pharmacist himself, Bloom didn't sell his Yorkdale Shoppers franchise until three years after he went into management. His on-the-job training was supplemented by "slews of MBA-type [university] programs."

Although Bloom concerns himself with every aspect of Shoppers Drug Mart, from the packaging of Rialto products ("probably the biggest challenge to the Body Shop") to the acceptability of television commercials, he insists he's not a workaholic and guesses he puts in about 60 hours most weeks.

He received flak a few years ago from at least one Canadian actor who objected to the casting of well-known American actor Bea Arthur in Shoppers commercials. Although current ads feature only Canadian actors, Bloom stands by the previous ad campaign, which he says was very successful.

No Canadian actor came close to Arthur in attempting to portray "the toughest customer in the world," said Bloom. "We hired the best. I don't care whether it's a man or woman, Canadian or American."

At central office (the term Bloom prefers to head office), there is a deliberate plan to fast-track women to reflect the large percentage of female customers. And after years of informal mentoring, a formal mentoring plan (for men and women) is now being introduced.

Bloom didn't set out to run the company, he claims. He attributes his success to Koffler's mentoring, luck and a desire to excel. "I wanted to be the best pharmacist I could. Then [a few promotions later] I wanted to be the best vice-president of operations. I have an inner drive to be the best at what I do."

His interest in pharmacy was piqued as a high school student, when he worked part-time at Weinstein Drugs, the downtown Toronto pharmacy co-owned by his father and his uncle.

But Bloom would rather talk up Shoppers than answer questions about himself. "Not that I'm super modest; I really believe it's a team effort."

Part of that effort includes a commitment to health education and funding of related projects. Shoppers is the largest corporate supporter of diabetic research in Canada, he pointed out. A recent walk for diabetes, run by Shoppers in 11 cities, raised $1.5 million, Bloom said.

"I really believe that when you're a leader of a company that's a leader, you have a big responsibility to give back to the community."

Shoppers is a major supporter of the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation and recently came out with instruction cards on breast self-examination. The waterproof cards, part of Shoppers' Healthwatch program, can be used in the shower.

Other medical conditions on the Shoppers agenda include asthma, hypertension, heart disease, arthritis and osteoporosis. Toronto's Hospital for Sick Children is a Shoppers beneficiary, with proceeds from its in-hospital pharmacy being given to the hospital.

Although Shoppers is in the health promotion business and has produced anti-smoking literature for customers, Bloom still bristles over the Ontario government's decision to ban pharmacies from selling tobacco, a move which hurt pharmacies economically. And as an employee of Imasco, parent company for both Shoppers and Imperial Tobacco, Bloom would appear to have a double conflict.

He insists that is not the case. "We will not be the moral, cultural or social censor board for any product ... Did the incidence of smoking fall [after the ban]? No. All it did was hurt us financially. [Notwithstanding, Shoppers recorded a·41 percent gain in operating profits in the first half of this year.] We lost related sales. If someone came in and picked up cigarettes and shampoo, now he'll go to the supermarket. All it did was make us more uncompetitive. I don't advocate smoking, but I do advocate personal rights and freedoms."

Bloom suggests the ban has created further problems; he claims some of the smaller stores now selling tobacco are not as conscientious as Shoppers was in refusing to sell to underage teens.

Any bad days that Bloom has are usually related to government policy, he said. "I love what I do. I love the company."

His enthusiasm is infectious, according to Konviser. "He has that electric personality."

SHOOTING HOOPS

Twenty recent immigrants to Israel are getting the chance to play basketball thanks to the efforts of the Jewish Agency for Israel, the Association of Americans and Canadians in Israel and the municipality of Beersheva. The goal was to give the boys a feeling of belonging and being part of a team.

World Series Champs!!

By DR. BERNARD RUBIN

Special to the CJN

The New York Yankees are the world champions of baseball, and I find it difficult to put into words how happy this makes me. Let me begin by saying that I was born and raised in New York, and the Yankees were in almost every World Series (usually victorious) of my childhood and youth. They won 14 pennants and nine World Series from 1949 through 1964.

My childhood was, therefore, connected to having my beloved Yankees as perennial World Series champions, or at least contestants. As a fan, I would begin each baseball season speculating who our great lefty, Whitey Ford, would pitch against to start that year's World Series.

Getting into the series was taken for granted. We Yankee fans believed then, and still believe now, that the championship belongs in New York. If this comes across as arrogant and insensitive, you must understand that I am culturally a New Yorker, and I am also a dentist. If The CJN wanted sensitivity and delicacy, they could have found someone with a different background to write this article.

After 1964, the Yankees, for a variety of reasons, stopped winning. It became part of my growing up to understand that in life, just as in baseball, you can't always win.

When the Yanks returned to the World Series in 1976, '77 and '81, winning in '77 and '78, I thought that the world, after a 20-year hiatus from 1964 to 1976, was returning to the way it should be, with the Yankees constantly winning. Little did I know that from the last victory in 1978 (Yankee fans only rejoice in total victories), there would be a complete drought until 1996.

My youth and innocence had totally disappeared. Teams all over the United States were winning World Series, and Yankee victories were mere memories to be relived on old-timer days. Even upstart franchises in foreign countries, such as the Toronto Blue Jays, won a couple of championships.

Now that the Yankees have at last won another title, it brings me back to the strong connection with my childhood, when the Yankees were always the best team and I would enjoy watching them either in person or on television with my parents. I even had the good fortune of attending, in person at Yankee Stadium, Don Larsen's perfect game against the hated Brooklyn Dodgers. It was the pivotal fifth game of the 1956 World Series that the Yankees eventually won in seven games.

The Yankees of the '50s starred Mickey Mantle, Yogi Berra and Whitey Ford. They were joined in the '60s by Roger Maris, who hit 61 home runs in 1961. Mantle and Maris, as well as my parents, have since passed from the scene.

This year's victory evokes the memories of an innocent, pampered childhood, where everything was right and wonderful with the world and I enjoyed it with two loving parents.

The 1996 edition of the Yankees was not the dominant team in baseball, as were my old-time Yankee teams. This team won due to hard work, experience, grit and a few well-placed umpire mistakes. I nevertheless welcome the victory, as it evokes a time gone by that is lost forever. The Yankees are the champs. Long live the champs.

Rubin, a longtime Yankee fan, once met Mickey Mantle.

CJN CHANUKAH POETRY CONTEST

The CJN announces its 2nd annual Chanukah poetry contest.

Who can enter: Anyone can enter except CJN employees or members of their family.

There are three age categories for entrants:
1. Twelve years old and under. 2. Thirteen to 18 years old.
3. Eighteen years old and up.

How to enter: The poems must be about Chanukah; they cannot be longer than 40 lines. A maximum of one poem per entrant may be submitted. Please include your name, age, address and phone number with the poem. We would prefer to receive typewritten poems if possible. We will return poems if you send a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

You may mail or deliver your poems to: CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest, The Canadian Jewish News, 1500 Don Mills Road, Suite 205, North York, Ontario, M3B 3K4.

The contest closes at 5 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 18, 1996.

Prizes: The judges will choose six poems to be published, two from each of the three categories, which in their opinion, most poetically and evocatively convey an aspect of the meaning of Chanukah. Each of the "winners" will also receive a cheque for $50.

Only six poems will be selected as "winners". Space permitting, we may publish other poems as honorable mentions. The decisions of the judges will be final. The odds of "winning" depend upon the number and the quality of submissions received.

How the winners will be notified: "Winning" entrants will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, Nov. 22, 1996.

When the prizes will be awarded: The winning poems will be published in The CJN of Dec. 5, 1996. We look forward to receiving your poems. May the miracle of Chanukah and the magic of its light be reflected in your poems.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Regie des Loteries et courses du Quebec.

ספרותנו

מאת: יעל זליגר

על פוליטיקה ישראלית.

"אני לא יודע מה הם רוצים ממני, לא עשיתי להם כלום", כך מצטטת אורלי אוזלאי-כץ את שמעון פרס בספרה: האיש שלא ידע לנצח - שמעון פרס במלכודת סיזיפוס, ערוך רמי טל, ידיעות אחרונות/ספרי חמד. זהו ציטוט מדברים שפרס אמר על חבריו שהיכו אותו בילדותו. כזה, סבורה אוזלאי-כץ, היה גם הלך המחשבה וההרגשה של שמעון פרס בשנות בגרותו ובמהלך חייו הפוליטיים. תמיד חש שהוא בצילם של בעלי הכריזמה: בן-גוריון, דיין, רבין. בהקשר זה מצטייר פרס כדמות טראגית שנאחז וניצמד לכיסא הפוליטי ואינו מרפה.

בתבונה אין המחברת מרבה בפרטים על מערכת הבחירות האחרונה. כבר דובר בה רבות, אלא מציינת את עיקרה: פרס שוב צועד כעיוור לקראת ההפסד. ושוב הוא "לא יודע מה רוצים ממני" והם, האחרים, אשמים. כמה מאנשיו של פרס ניסו לדבר על ליבו בתקופת מערכת הבחירות. שימנה את ברק לשר הבטחון, שירומם נציג של העלייה הרוסית בשורות המפלגה, ועוד. הוא לא רצה ובמקום זאת חיזר אחר אנשים שלא היה צריך להם ושלא בחרו בו.

ספר אחר, שאיננו בבחינת ביוגרפיה אלא פרשנות פוליטית הוא ספרו של אמנון ברזילי, רמון - ביוגרפיה פוליטית, שוקן. ברזילי, כתב "הארץ" מעניק לקוראים תמונה מעניינת של אדם שעשה דרך קשה מימי ילדותו, דרך ימי בגרותו ועד לעיצובו כדמות פוליטית.

The Inside Back

About families

Dear Susan,

Chanukah is supposed to be a joyous time, but because I can't afford to spend lavishly, my children are feeling deprived and cheated. Television only contributes to their feelings of hardship by bombarding them with advertisements featuring the latest toy crazes. I want to maintain a balance, but I feel pressured to give in to their needs. Do you have any creative approaches to suggest?

Dear Reader,

Many thanks for having the courage to share your dilemma. I think there are three basic components to your dilemma — the urge to "fit in" and behave in a "normal" manner; your concerns about being trapped by your children's demands; and your moral obligation to teach your children what is right or wrong according to the values and ethics of your family.

Jewish children often feel overwhelmed by the sights, sounds and symbols of Christmas. Outwardly they are surrounded by symbols and traditions in which they do not share. In their need to feel a part of a society that is annually captured by the trappings of Christmas, they feel a need to fit in, and to secure what others have — big gifts.

Within the confines of your house, it is your right and responsibility as a parent to stipulate what is and isn't acceptable vis-á-vis gift giving. Gifts at Chanukah are to be tokens, and they are in no way a measure of our affection. We must be careful as parents not to get caught up in the trap of conspicuous consumption.

As a parent it is your job to impart moral, ethical and religious values to your children. Chanukah is an ideal time for strengthening the moral fabric of your particular family. It was the Maccabees' belief in themselves that ultimately led to their victory despite all odds. It was their belief in the sanctification of the Temple and in their families that made the oil lamp so bright that one days worth of oil burned for eight days. One could extract a very '90s message from this festival of lights. It is about more for less, and about one's belief in oneself and the strength of the family that makes it possible to overcome pressures against all odds. If you believe in yourself, what you know to be right will easily get your children through this holiday season.

CARAMEL APPLE COOKIES

HERB CAPLAN SELLS Amana FOR LESS

1111 Weston Road (S. of Eglinton) 767-1655

3/4 cup powdered sugar
2/3 cup margarine or butter, softened
1 tblsp apple juice concentrate, thawed
1 1/2 cups all purpose flour
1/4 tsp salt
flat toothpicks
30 vanilla caramels
2 tblsp apple juice concentrate
2 tblsp water
3/4 cup finely chopped walnuts

Heat oven to 350°F. In large bowl, beat powdered sugar, margarine and 1 tblsp apple juice concentrate until light and fluffy. Lightly spoon flour into measuring cup; level off. Stir in flour and salt. Shape dough into 3/4" balls. Place 1" apart on ungreased cookie sheets. Bake for 12 to 17 mins. or until edges are light golden brown. Immediately insert toothpicks in centre of each cookie. Cool compeletely on wire racks.

In heavy 1 qt. saucepan over low heat, combine caramels, 2 tblsp apple juice concentrate and water. Cook until mixture is smooth, stirring constantly. Place walnuts on plate. Spoon caramel mixture over whole cookie, letting excess drip off. Press bottom of cookie in walnuts. Set on sheet of waxed paper. If caramel mixture becomes too thick, stir in more water 1/4 tsp. at a time. Yield: 36 cookies. Microwave tip: In 4 cup microwave safe measuring cup, combine caramels, 2 tblsp apple juice concentrate and water. Microwave on High 3-4 mins. or until caramels are melted, stirring every minute.
